Herdimas Anggara
+1 609 787 9536
anggarah@vcu.edu

curated portfolio
https://ritual.engineer/

□□□□□EDUCATION

Yale University
MFA in Graphic Design 2018 – 2021

Institut Teknologi Bandung
BSc in Chemical Engineering
Minor in Industrial Engineering
2007 – 2012

□□□□□TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Virginia Commonwealth University
Assistant Professor 2022 – present
self-developed
Platform Sabotage: Infrastructure Infiltration
Algorithmic Trickery: Deception, Metafiction, Subversion Projects: Spaghetti Code

Virginia Tech
Visiting Faculty (Term)
2021 – 2022
self-developed
Errant Frames: Animating the Unintended

Yale School of Art
Teaching Fellow 2020 – 2021 assisted Digital Animation (by Prof. Michael Rader)
Critical Practice (by Dean Marta Kuzma)

□□□□□SKILLS

Highly proficient in Photoshop, Illustrator, InDesign, Premiere Pro, After Effects, HTML, CSS, JavaScript, C#, C++, Python, AppleScript, Blender, and Max/MSP.
Native proficiency in Indonesian and Malay.
Full professional proficiency in English.
Reading knowledge of French, German, Spanish, Russian, Swedish, and Javanese.

□□□□□SELECTED PERFORMANCES

Cornell University — invited by Nancy P. Lin in Art Histories: An Introduction (Materiality) Cornell University — invited by Kaja McGowan in Shadowplay: Asian Art and Performance School for Poetic Computation — invited by Tiri Kananuruk in Making Mistakes
MassArt — invited by Ryan Diaz
in Everybody Dance Now: Design and Performance Princeton University — invited by Jeff Snyder in Creating Generative Audio-Visual Art in the Digital Medium University of the Arts London — invited by Mariana Marangoni in Refining Computational Arts Practice
New York University — invited by Sarah Rothberg in Applications (of Interactive Technologies) Cooper Union — invited by Kameelah Janan Rasheed in Teaching as Social Practice
New York University — invited by Cassie Tarakajian in Blessed/Blursed/Cursed Yale School of Art — invited by Bryant Wells in Coded Design
School for Poetic Computation — invited by Todd Anderson in An Artist's History of Computer Viruses and Malware Yale School of Art — invited by Barbara Glauber in Preliminary Core Studio Parsons School of Design — invited by Tuan Pham in Typography & Interaction

□□□□□SELECTED EXHIBITIONS

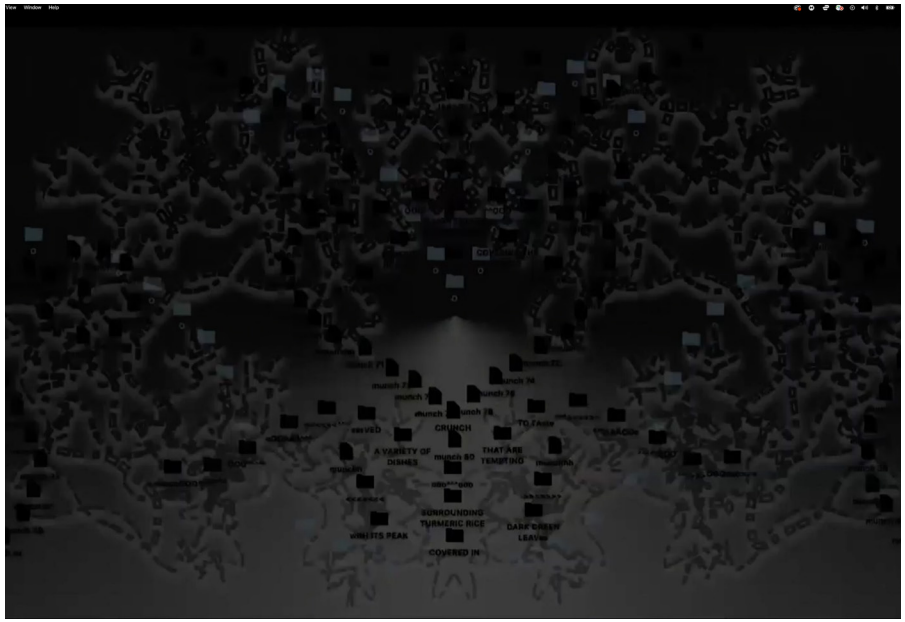

LAS Foundation (Berlin, Germany)
curated by Barbara Cueto Typojanchi (Seoul, South Korea)
curated by Haeok Shin
NEW INC x Rhizome (New York, NY) curated by Celine Katzman
The Digital Review (Vancouver, WA)
curated by Laura Hyunjhee Kim
The Hopkins Review (Baltimore, MD)
curated by Dora Malech Ammerman Center (New London, CT)
curated by Kit Son Lee

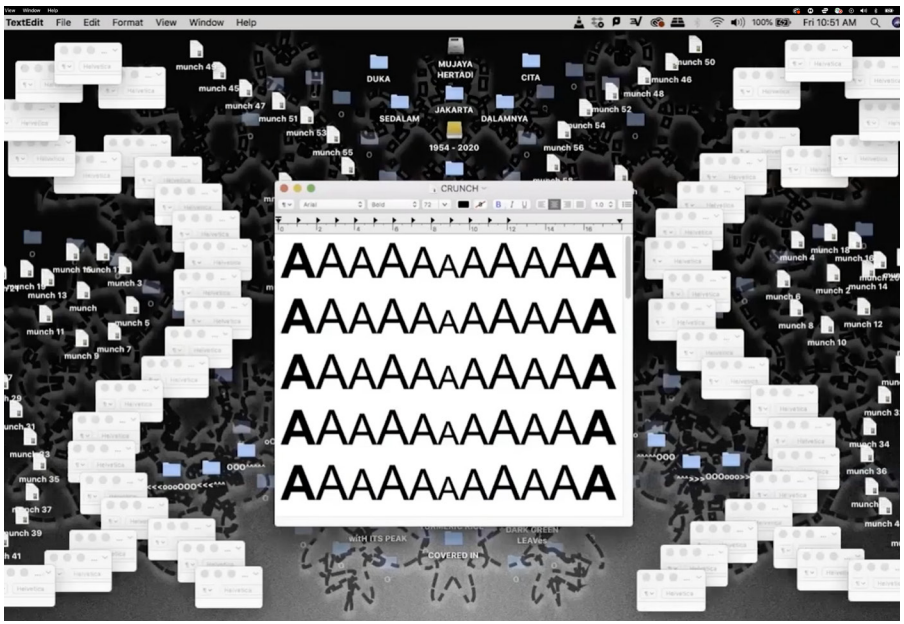

RASUK (2021), ACT 01

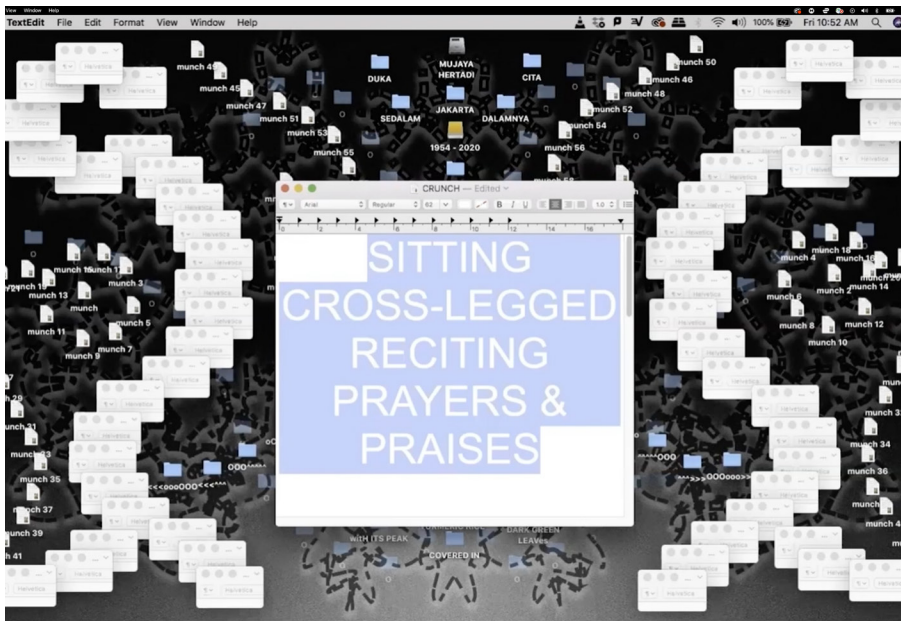

desktop theater, 14 minutes

They call it RASUK, possession. The kind that sneaks in slowly, like any ordinary habit you perform without question.

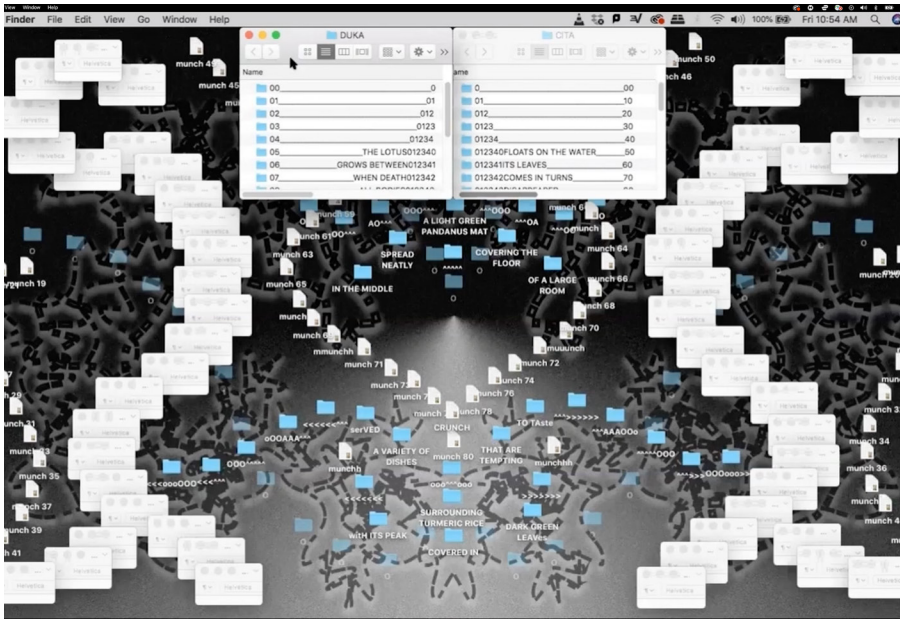

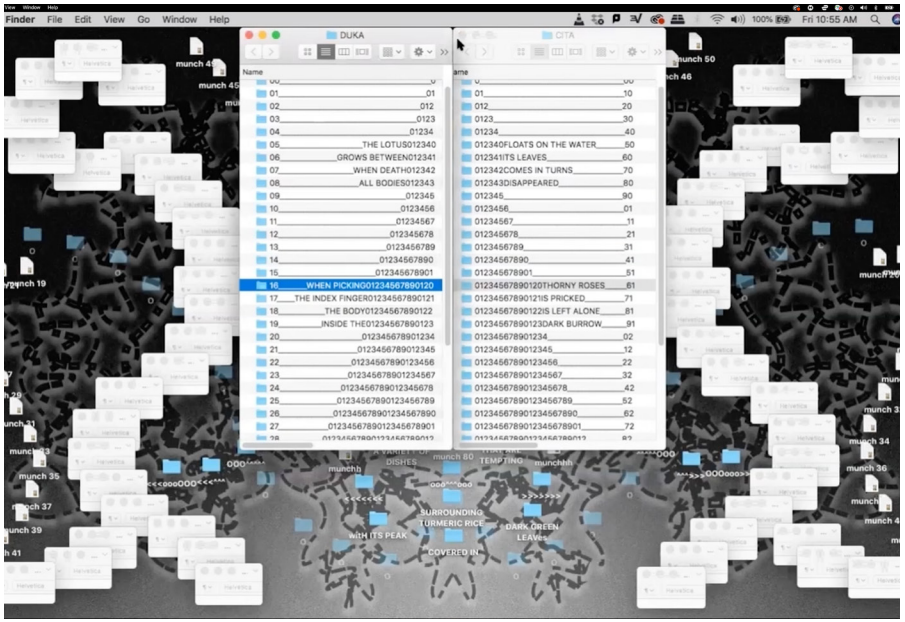

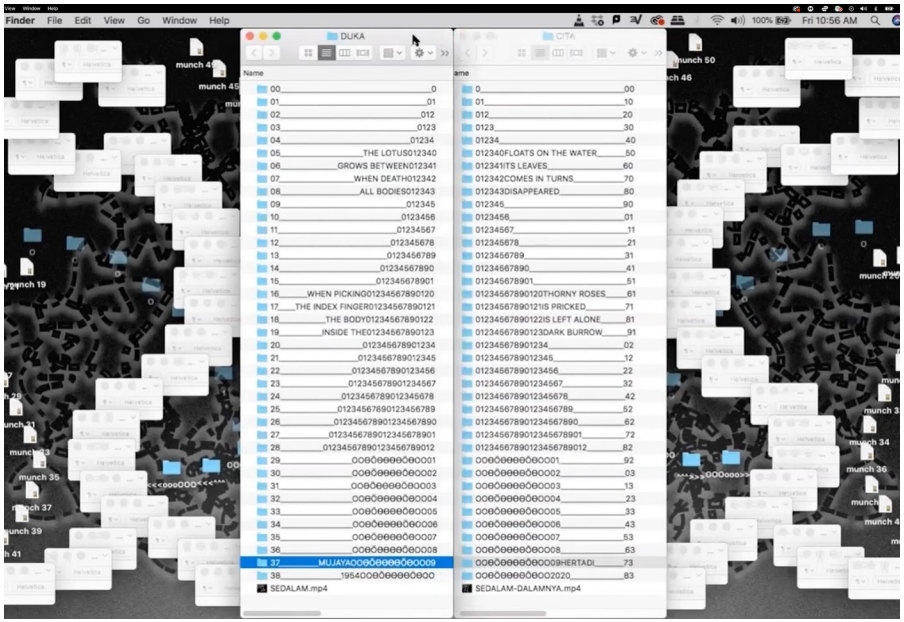

RASUK (2021), ACT 01

desktop theater, 14 minutes

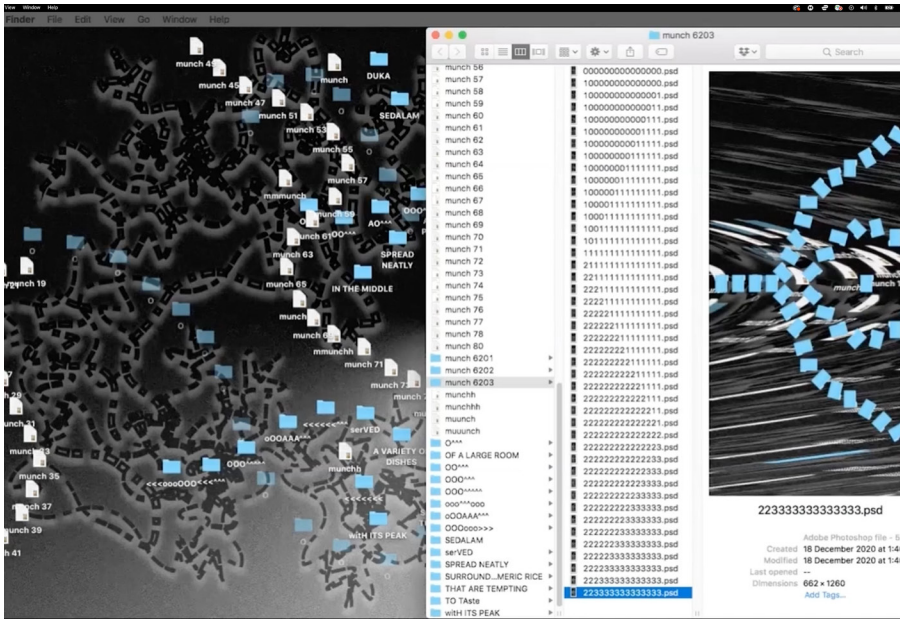

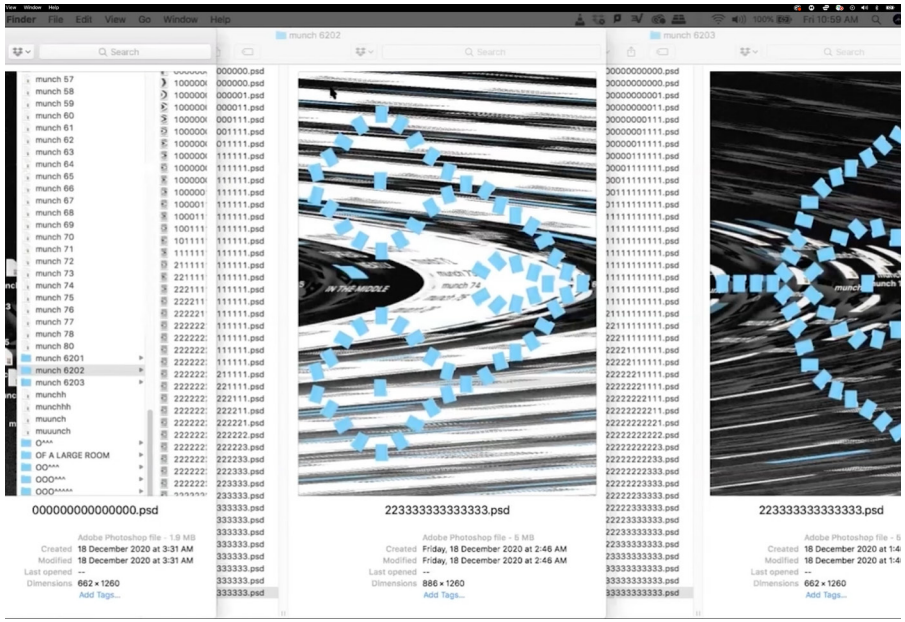

But then, right there in the familiarity, you notice something ritualistic, quiet patterns, recursive loops.

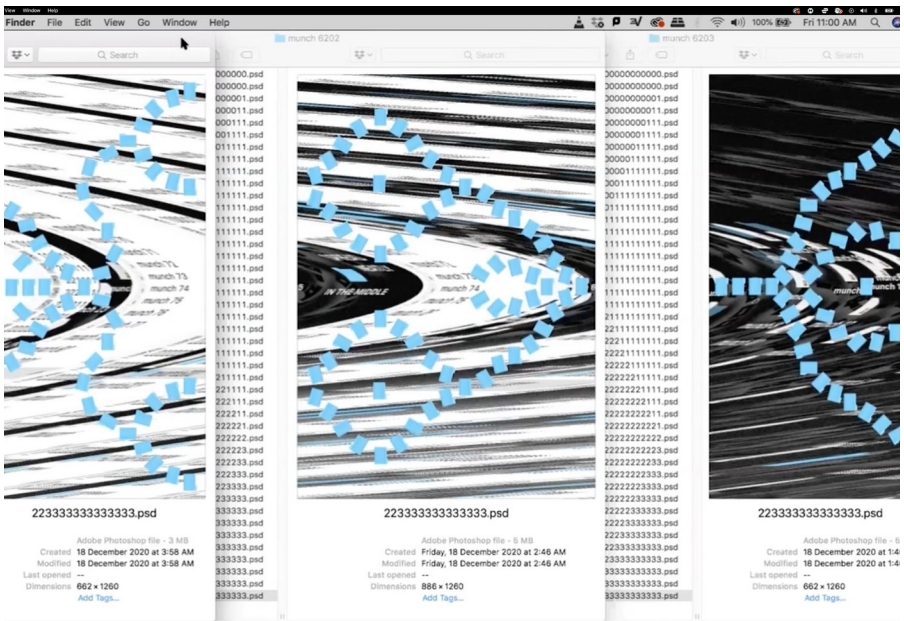

RASUK (2021), ACT 01

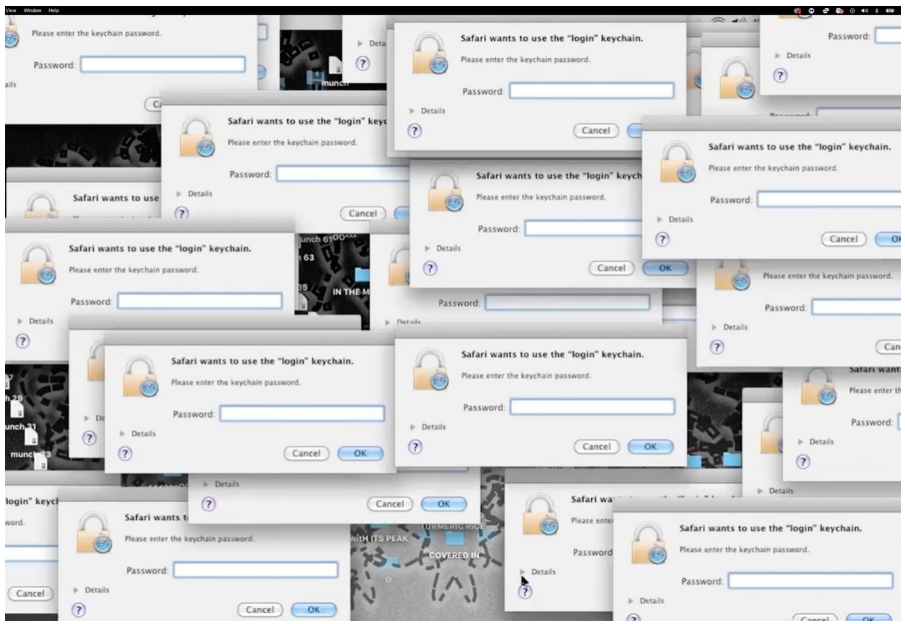

desktop theater, 14 minutes

You're caught in the act, maybe for the first time. By the time you sense what's at play, the second iteration's already watching, eager to draw you further in.

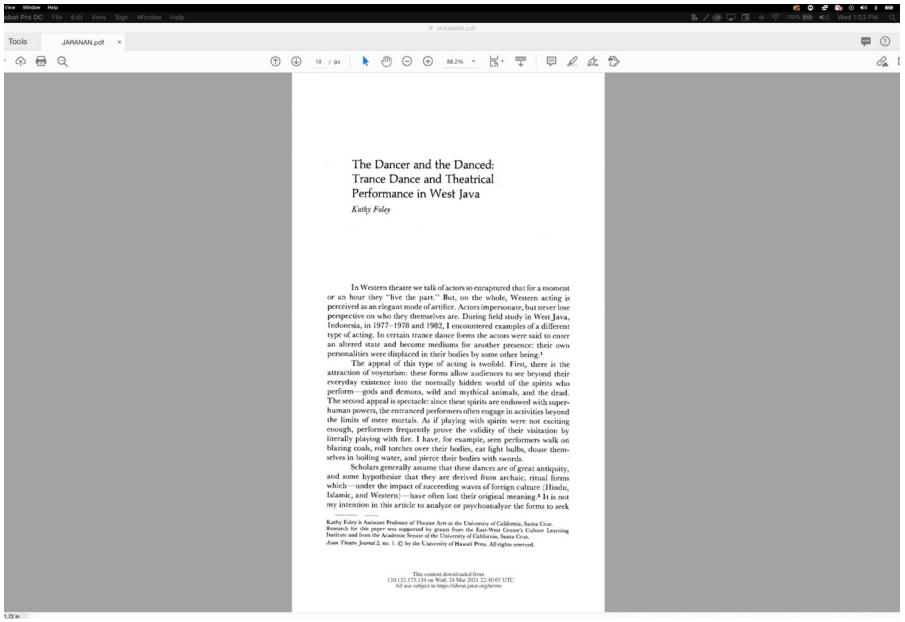

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

desktop theater, 21 minutes

The Dancer and the Danced:
Trance Dance and Theatrical Performance in West Java

Kathy Foley

In Western theatre we talk of actors so enraptured that for a moment or an hour they "live the part." But, on the whole, Western acting is perceived as an elegant mode of artifice. Actors impersonate, but never lose perspective on who they themselves are. During field study in West Java, Indonesia, in 1977–1978 and 1982, I encountered examples of a different type of acting. In certain trance dance forms the actors were said to enter an altered state and become mediums for another presence: their own personalities were displaced in their bodies by some other being.[1]

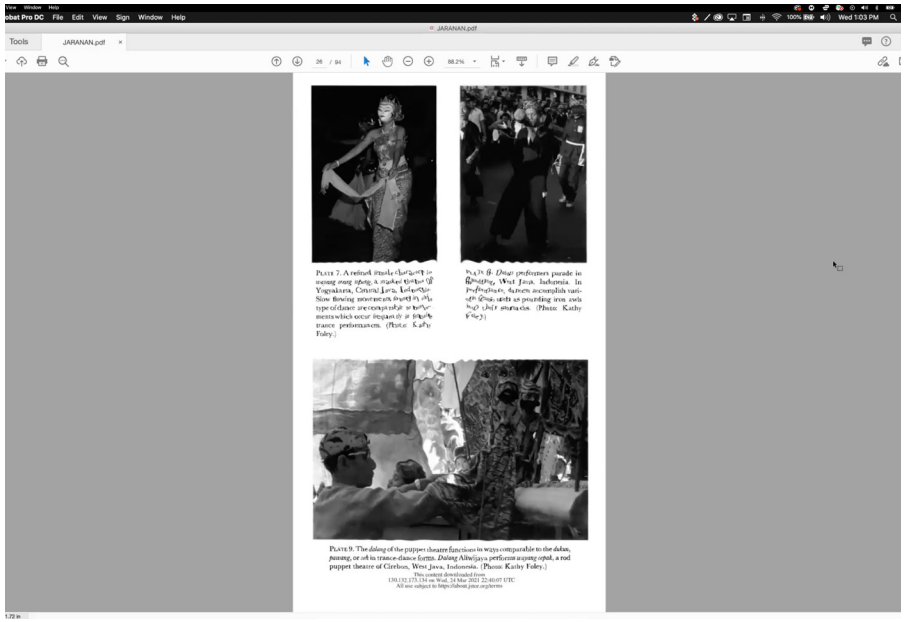

The appeal of this type of acting is twofold. First, there is the attraction of voyeurism: these forms allow audiences to see beyond their everyday existence into the normally hidden world of the spirits who perform—gods and demons, wild and mythical animals, and the dead. The second appeal is spectacle: since these spirits are endowed with superhuman powers, the entranced performers often engage in activities beyond the limits of mere mortals. As if playing with spirits were not exciting enough, performers frequently prove the validity of their visitation by literally playing with fire. I have, for example, seen performers walk on blazing coals, roll torches over their bodies, eat light bulbs, douse themselves in boiling water, and pierce their bodies with swords.

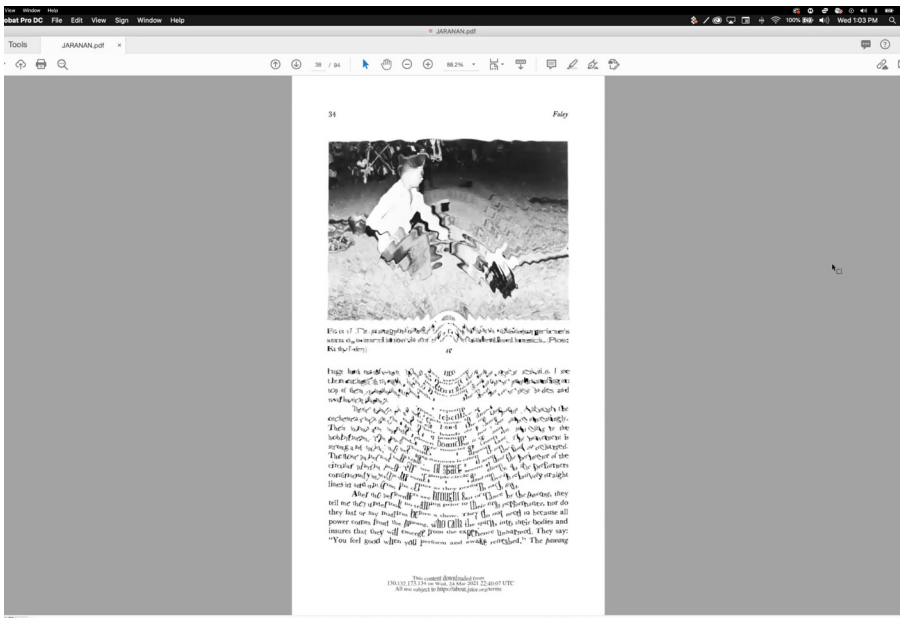

Scholars generally assume that these dances are of great antiquity, and some hypothesize that they are derived from archaic, ritual forms which—under the impact of succeeding waves of foreign culture (Hindu, Islamic, and Western)—have often lost their original meaning.[2] It is not my intention in this article to analyze or psychoanalyze the forms to seek Kathy Foley is Assistant Professor of Theater Arts at the University of California, Santa Cruz.

Research for this paper was supported by grants from the East-West Center's Culture Learning Institute and from the Academic Senate of the University of California, Santa Cruz.
Asian Theatre Journal 2, no. 1. © by the University of Hawaii Press. All rights reserved.

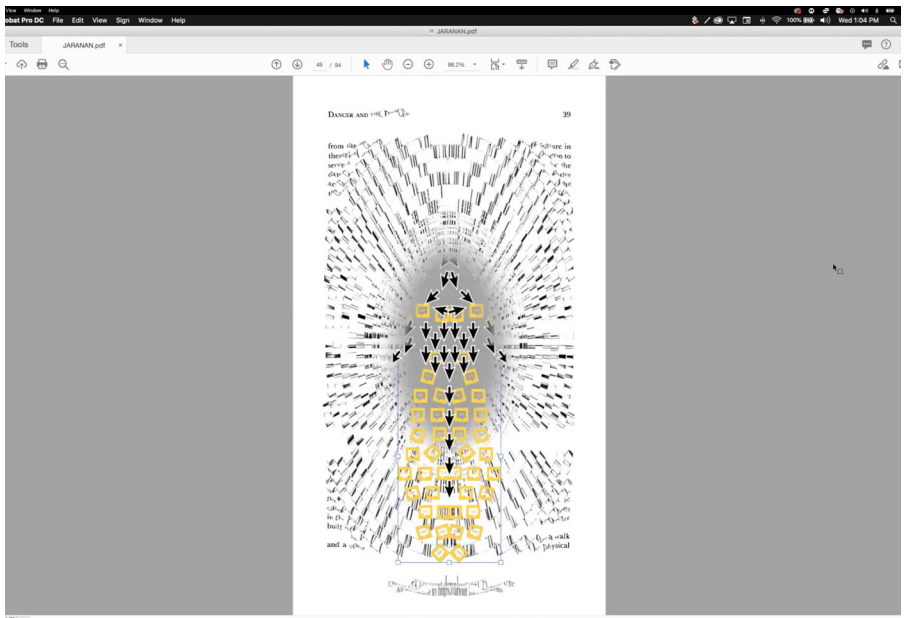

This content downloaded from 130.132.173.134 on Wed, 24 Mar 2021 22:40:07 UTC
All use subject to https://about.jstor.org/terms

Each task feels less like choice, more like choreography, movements that repeat and fold in on themselves, a spiral you're caught within.

34 Foley

Dancer and the Danced 39

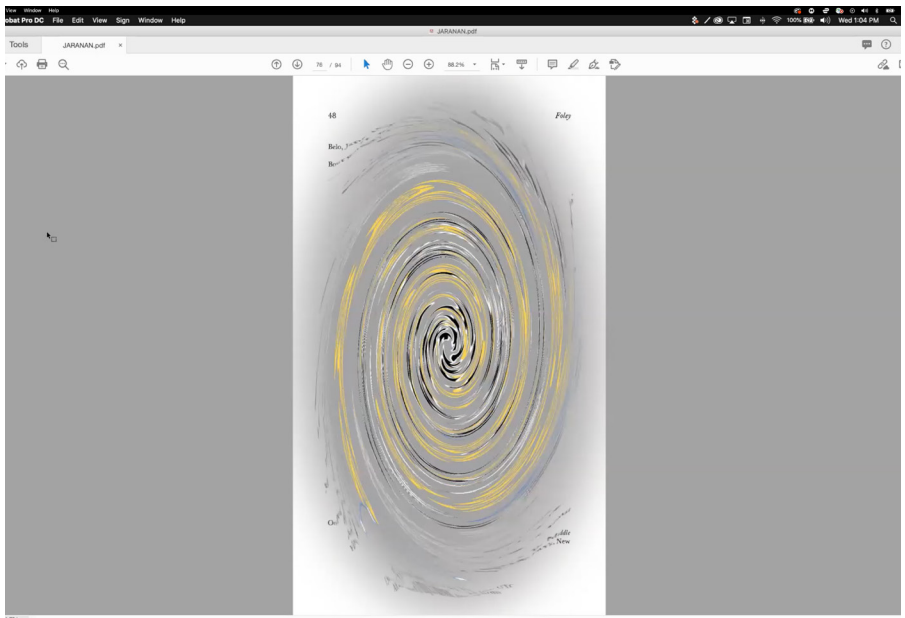

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

desktop theater, 21 minutes

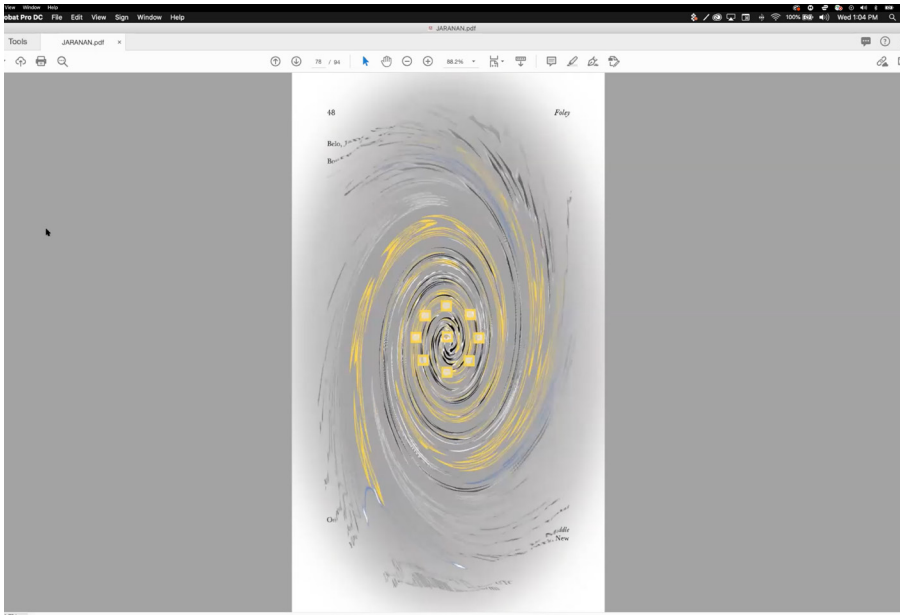

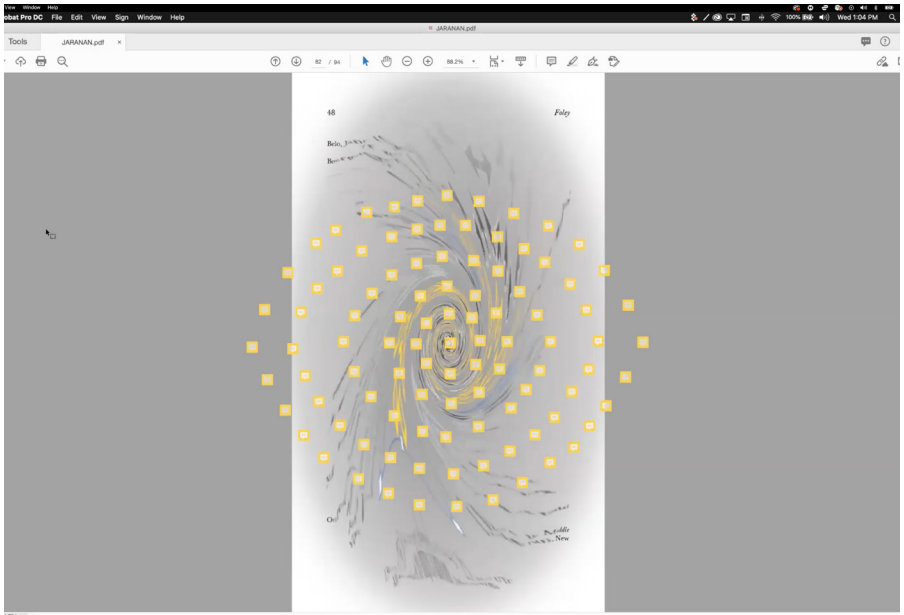

And in that recognition, you realize: something here has noticed you noticing. The second iteration is already watching, patient, waiting to see if you'll follow deeper.

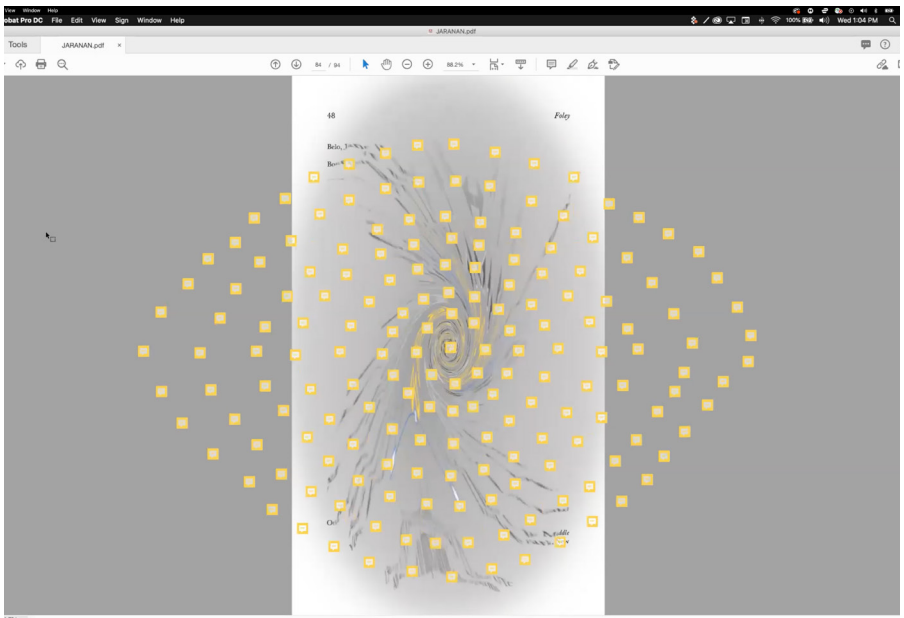

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

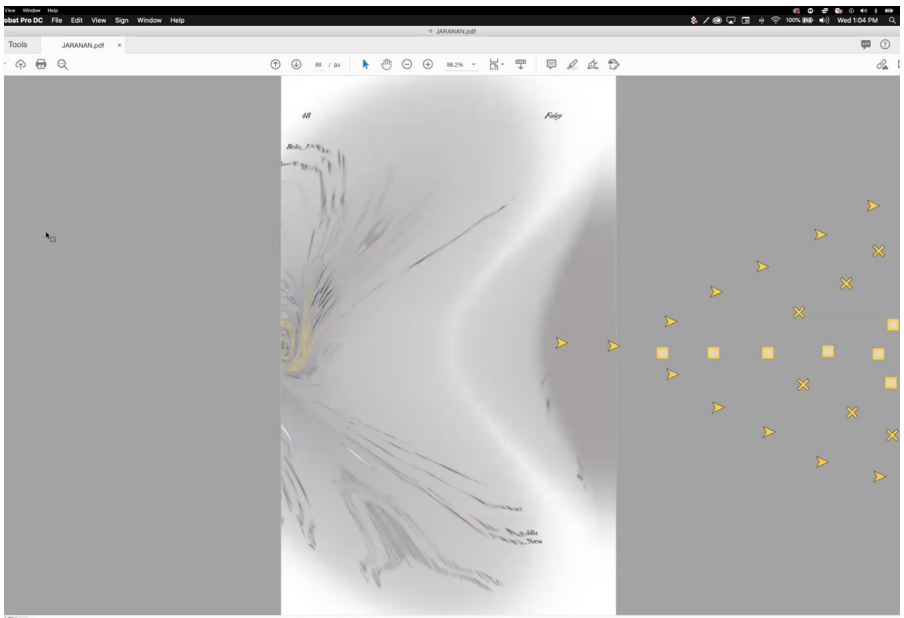

desktop theater, 21 minutes

You think you've grasped RASUK by now, understood its rhythm, and maybe you even believe you have the measure of it. But then, the rhythm tightens.

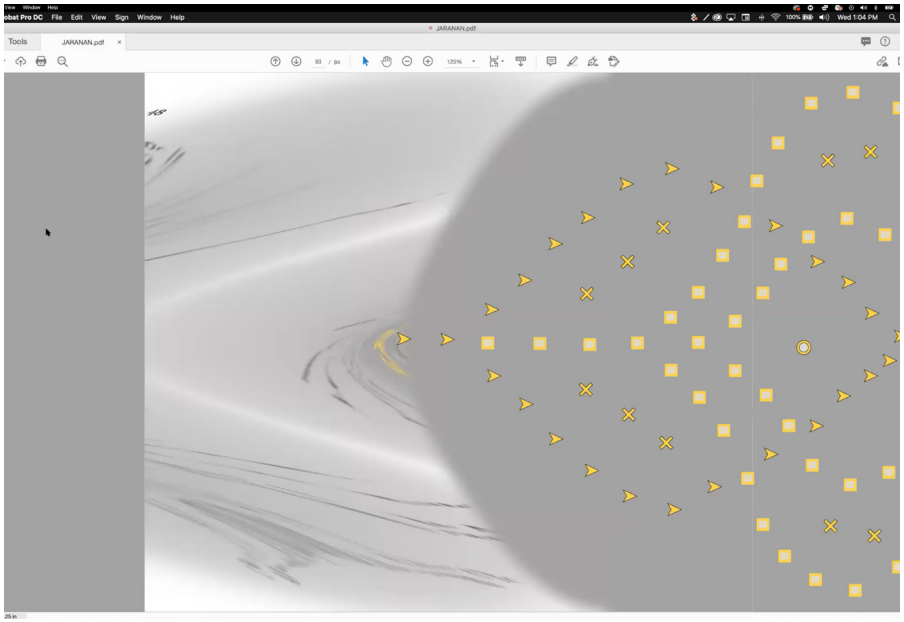

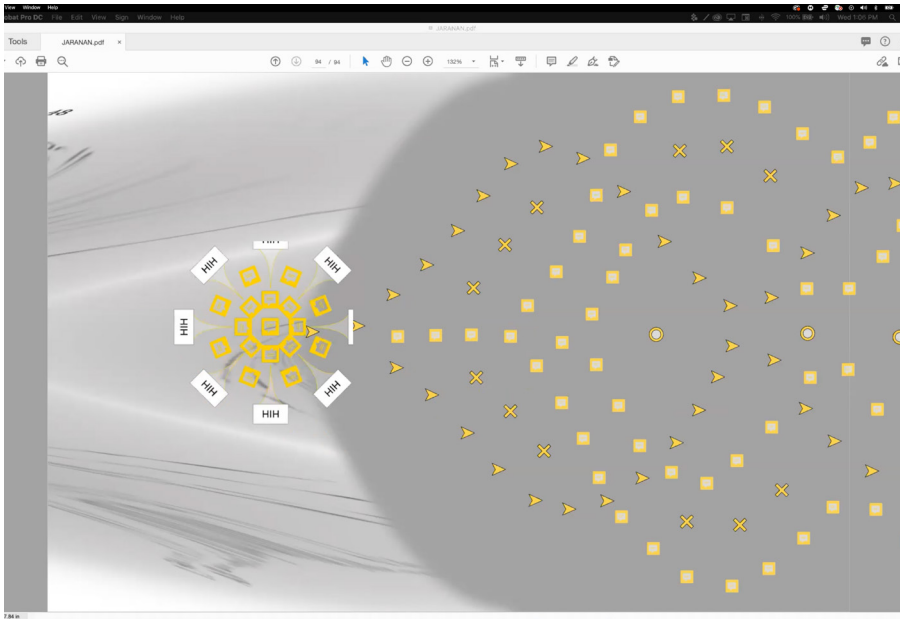

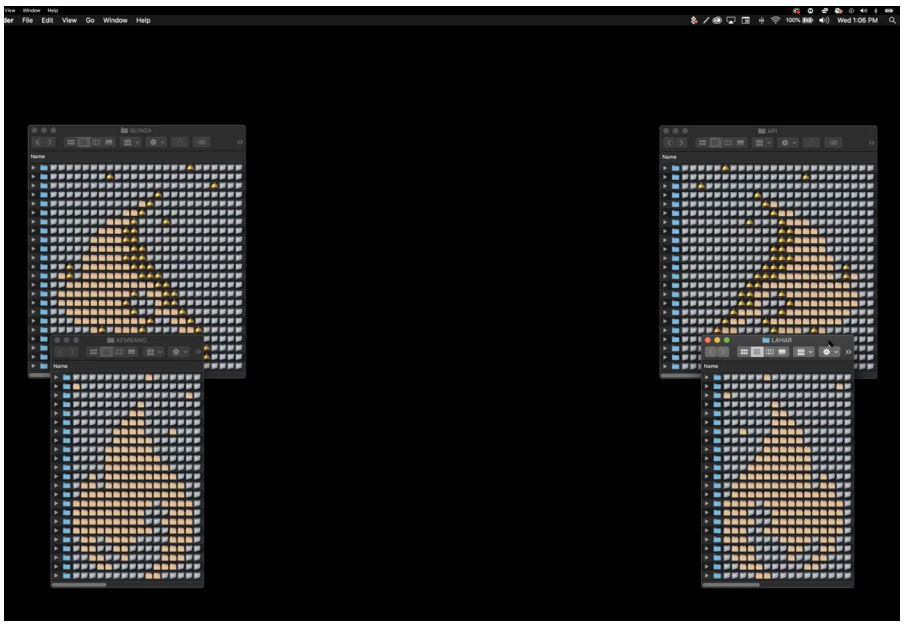

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

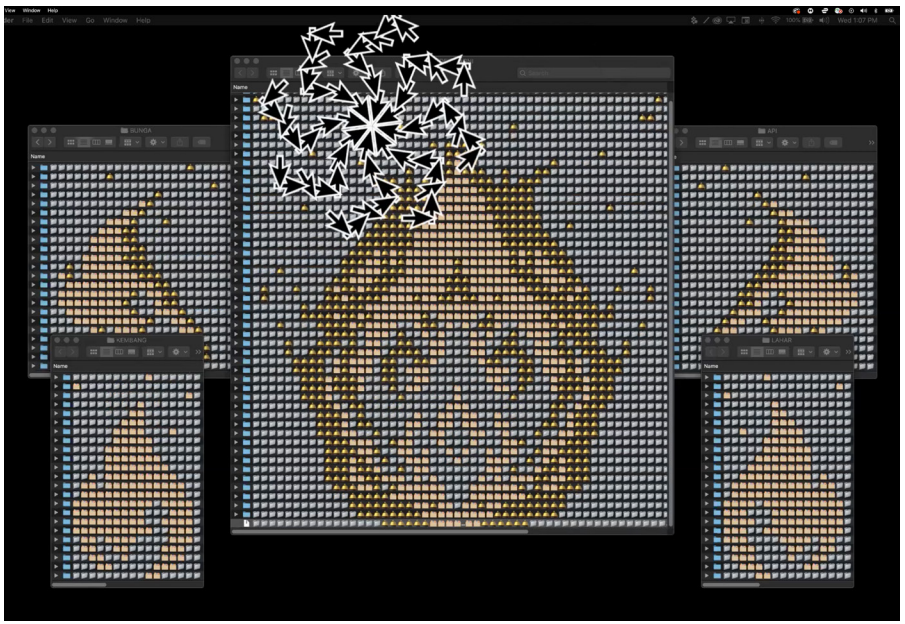

desktop theater, 21 minutes

Patterns that felt simple become layers that nestle into one another, each repetition is an echo within an echo, folding in ways that feel unnervingly rehearsed.

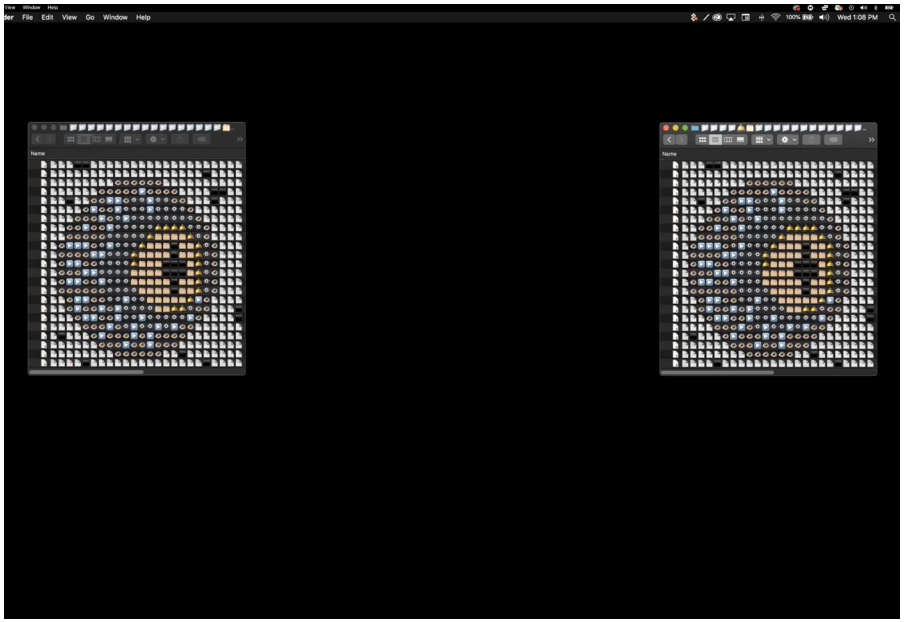

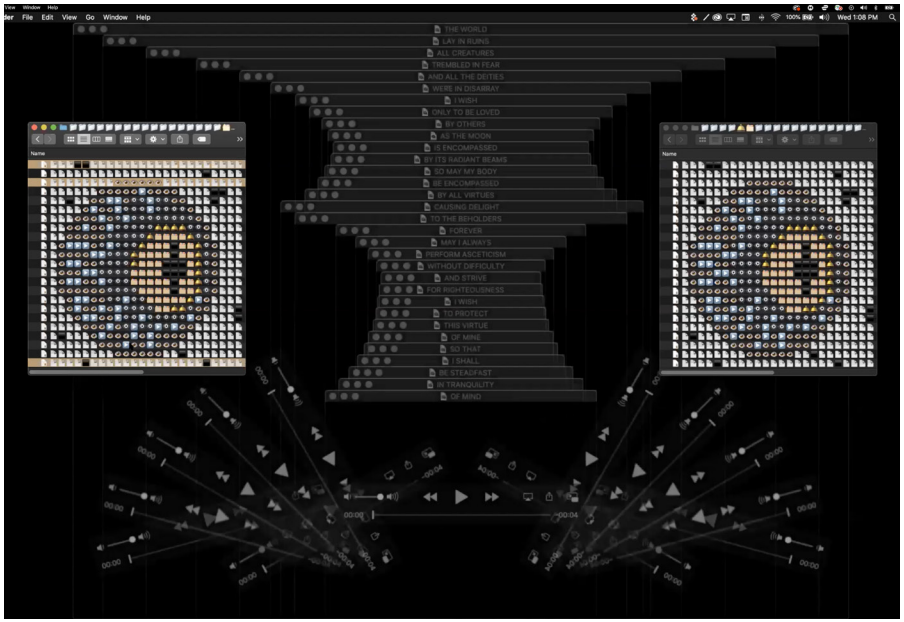

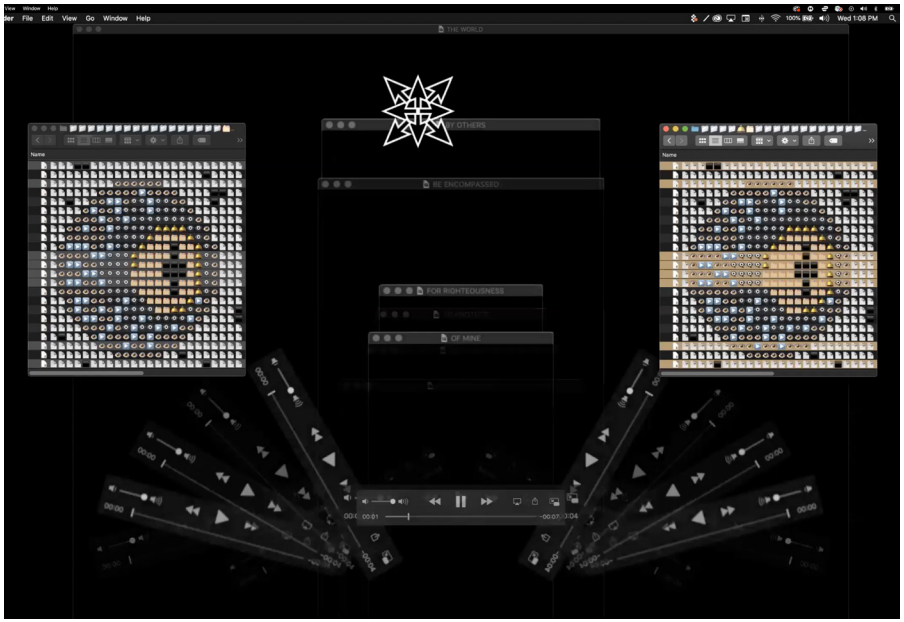

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

desktop theater, 21 minutes

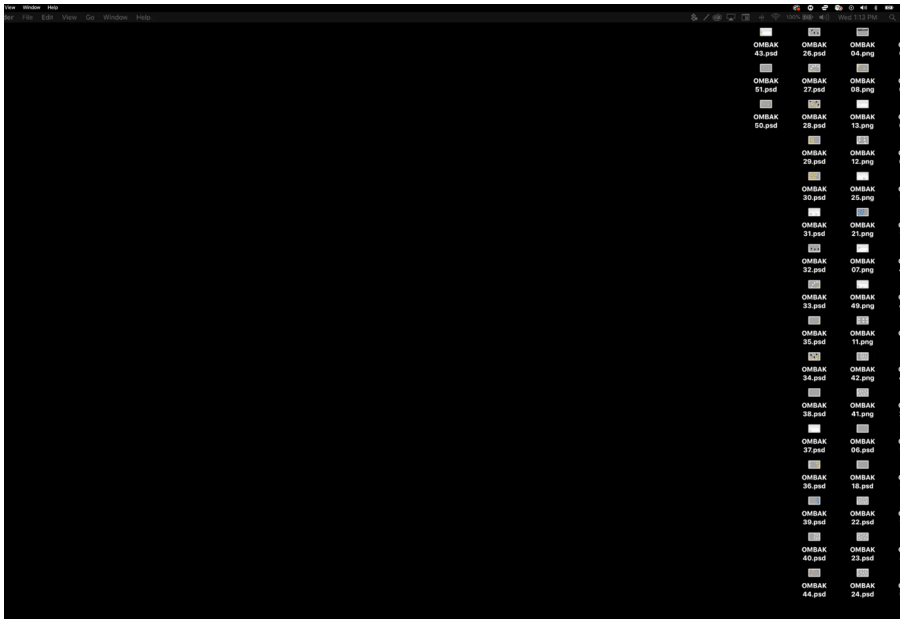

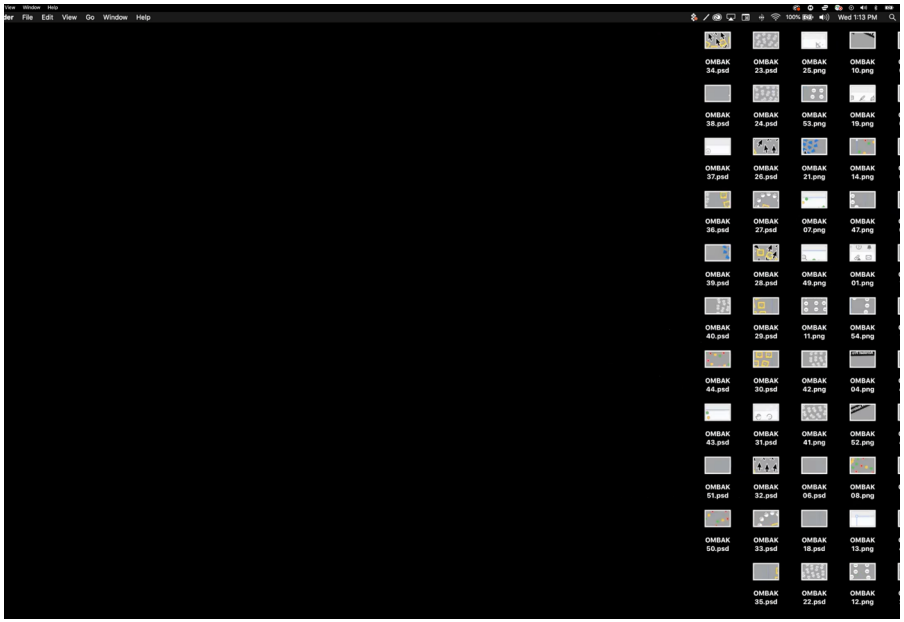

You're struck by a peculiar sense of reflection, as if the routine is bending back toward you, revealing your movements mirrored within it.

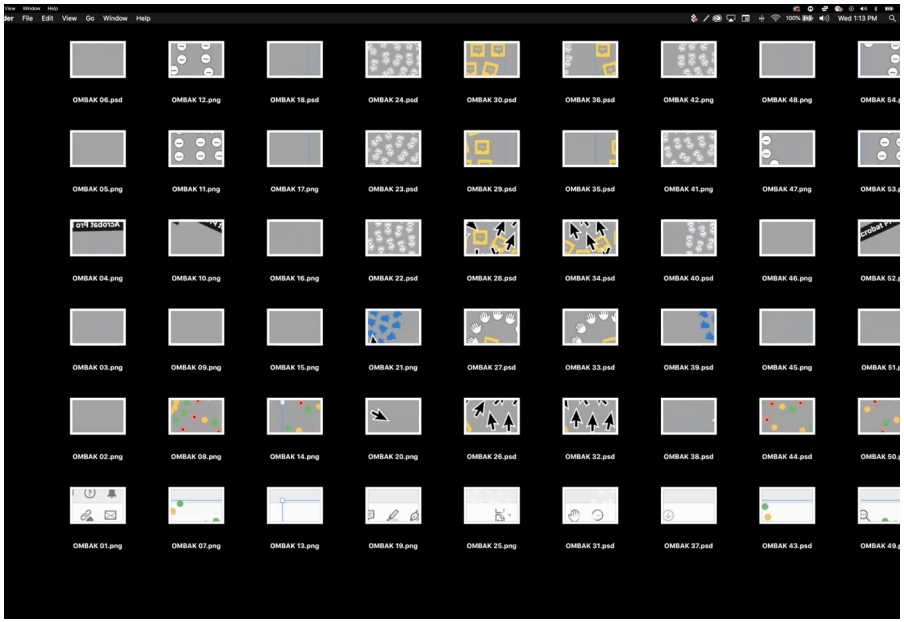

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

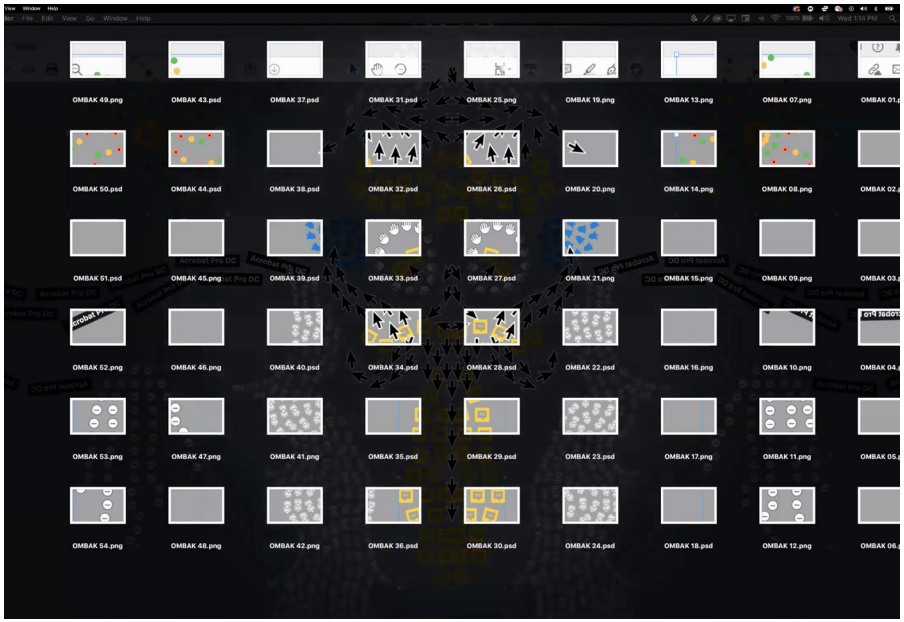

desktop theater, 21 minutes

Each click, each action, becomes a step in a dance that's both familiar and entirely other, as though the space is performing you.

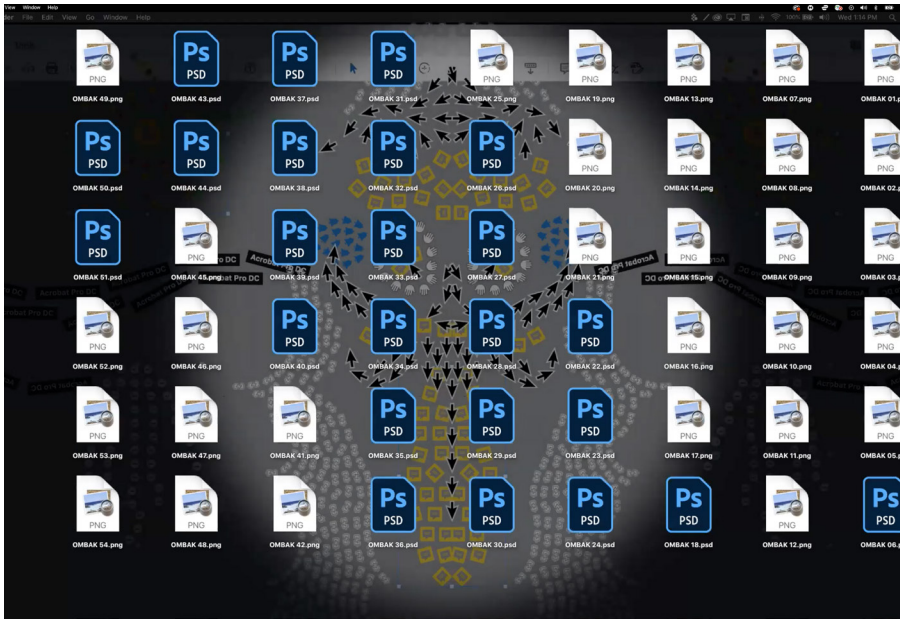

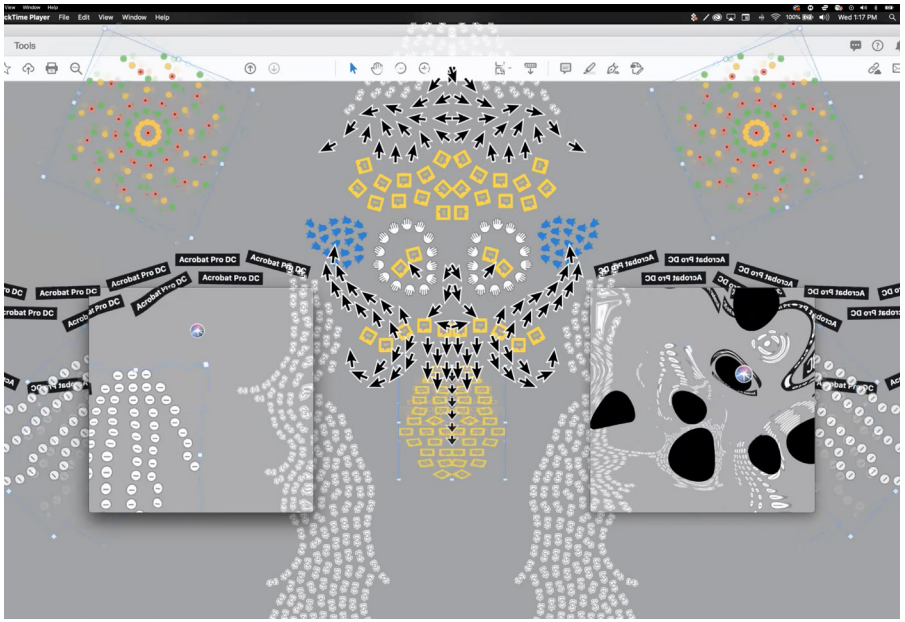

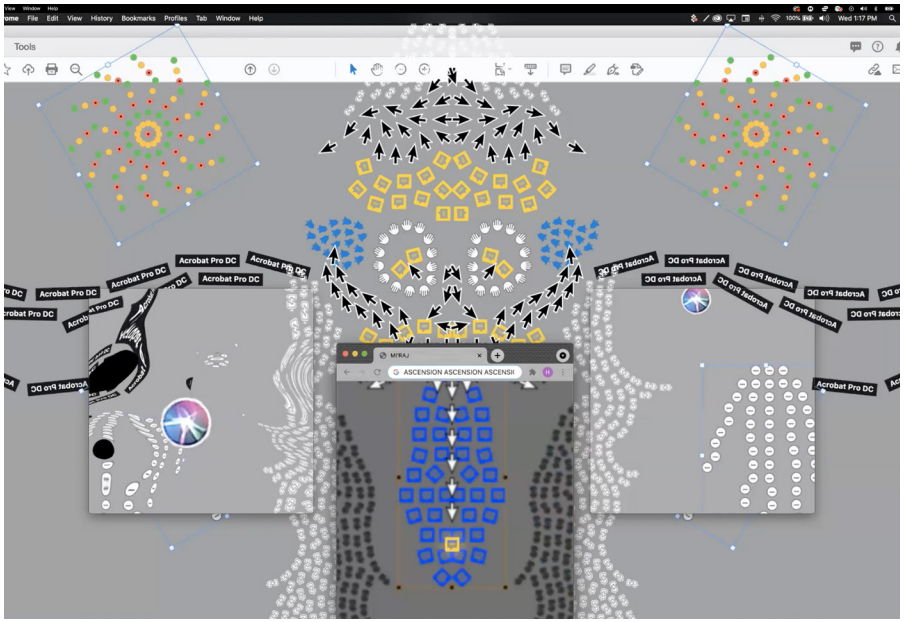

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

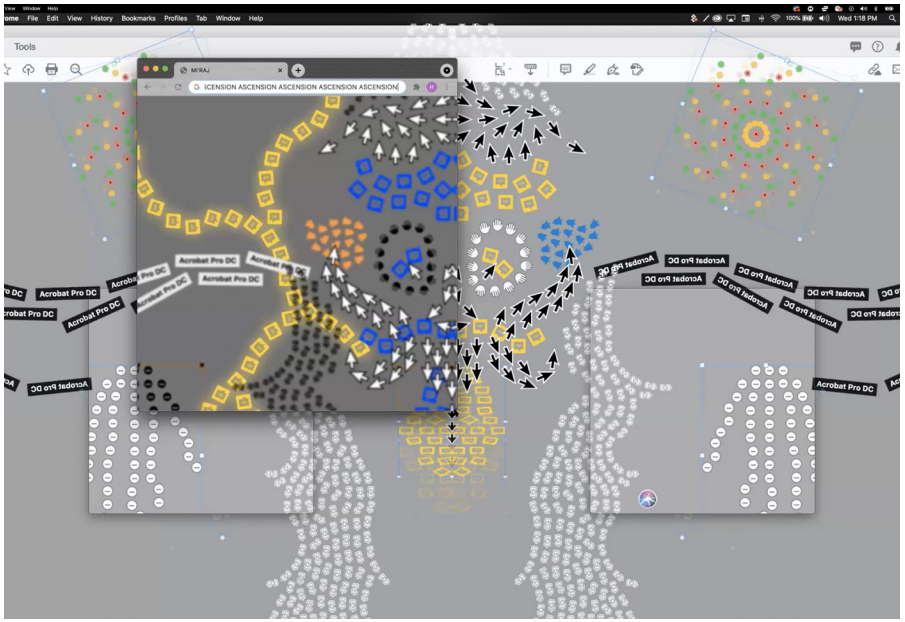

desktop theater, 21 minutes

And while you're drawn further, you feel the pull of something else, a shadow of a third, poised, as though the final act has already been written.

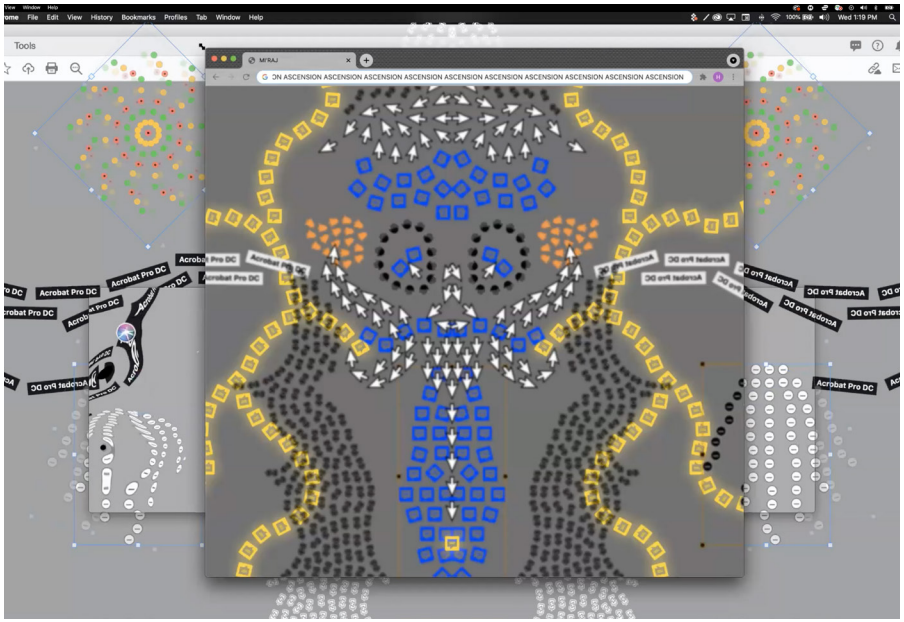

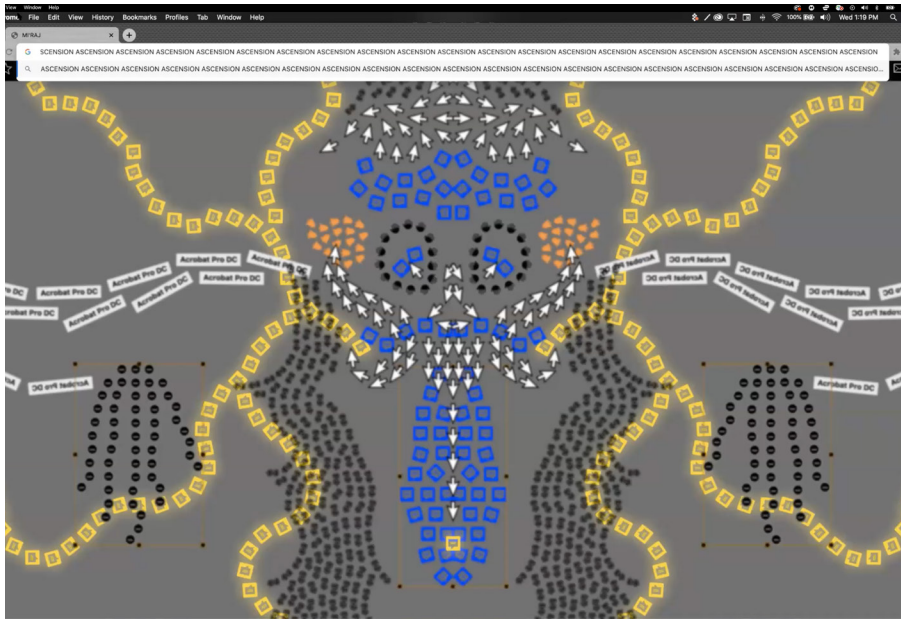

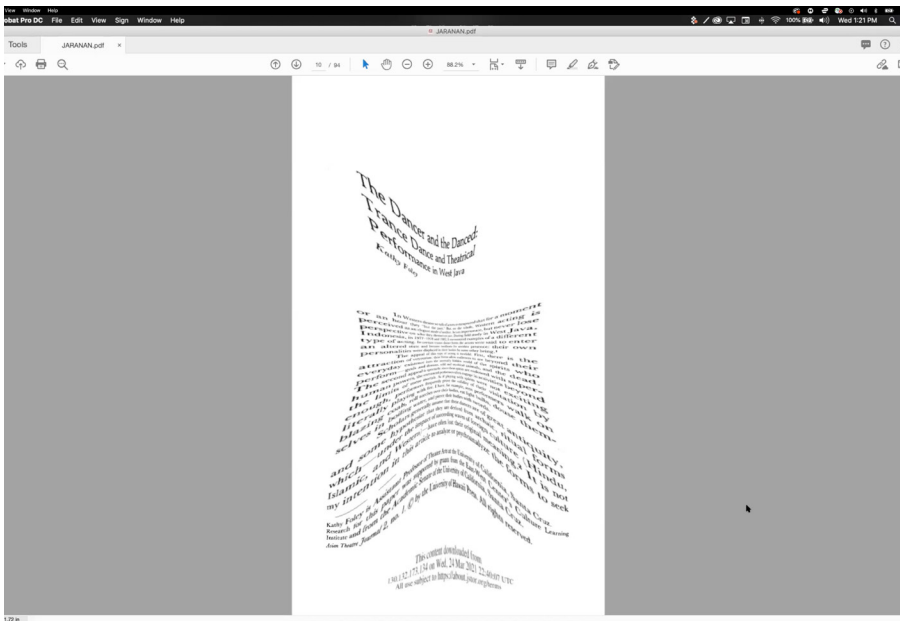

RASUK (2022), ACT 02

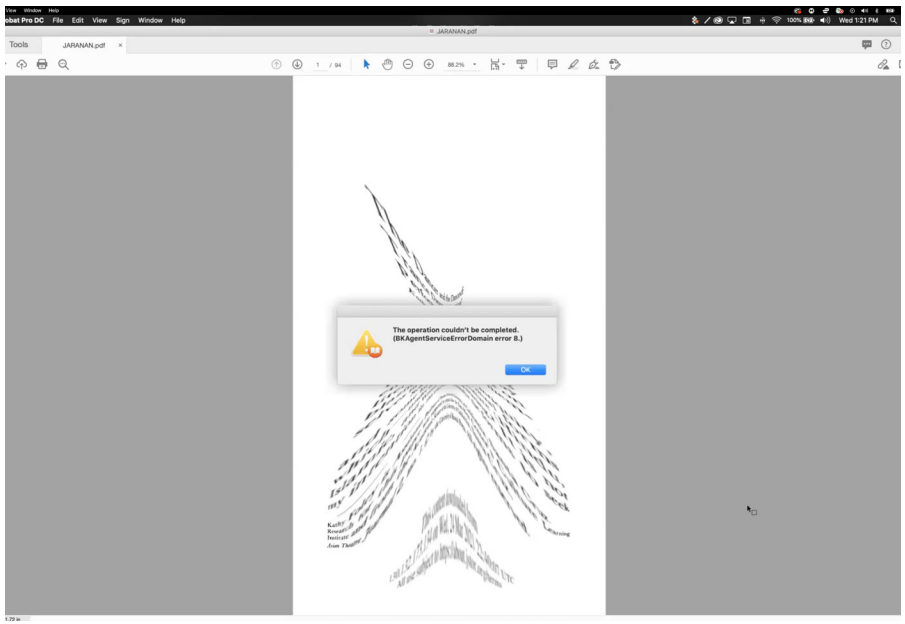

desktop theater, 21 minutes

There's an inevitability in the air, an unspoken promise that whatever path you take, the misstep has already been planted, waiting for you to stumble right into it.

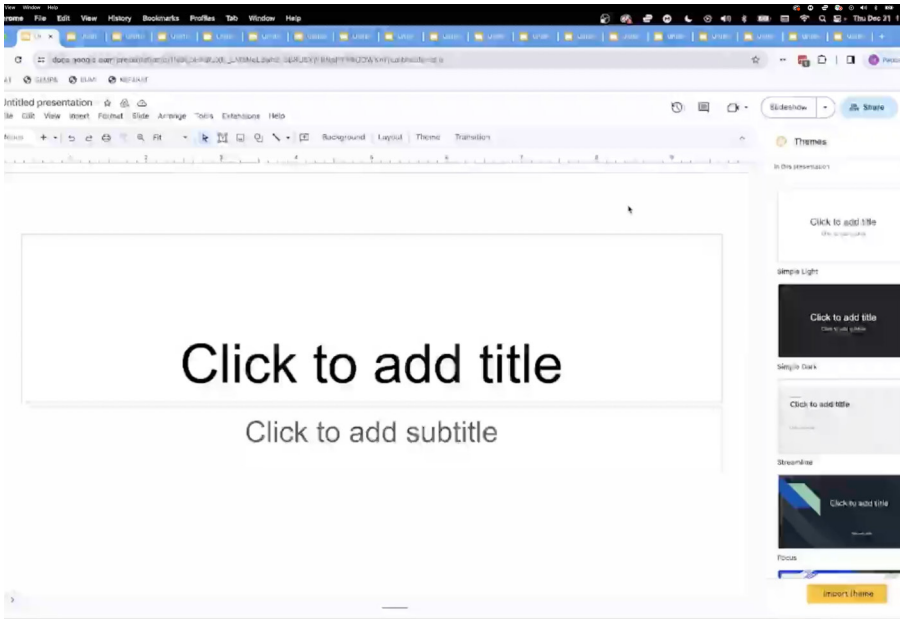

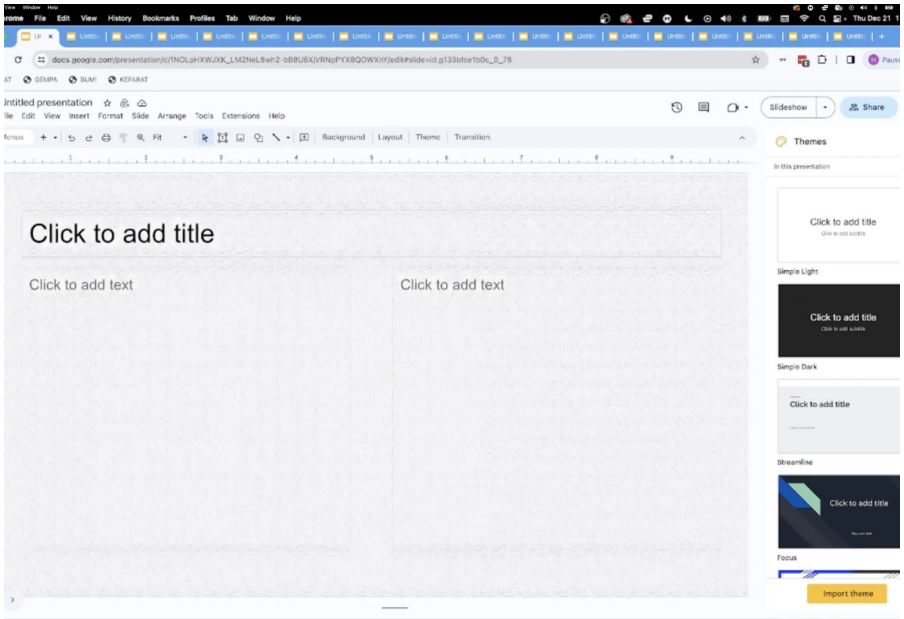

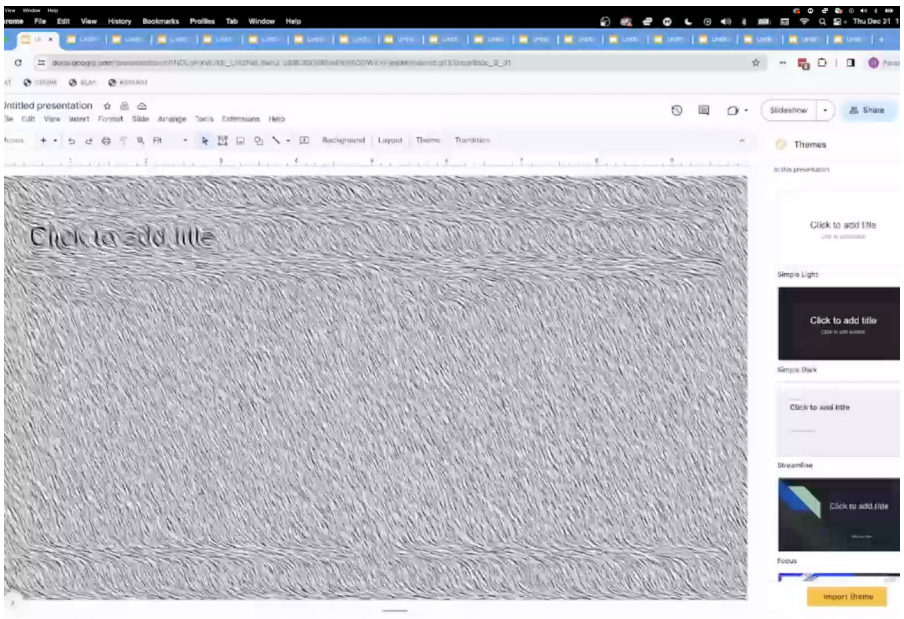

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

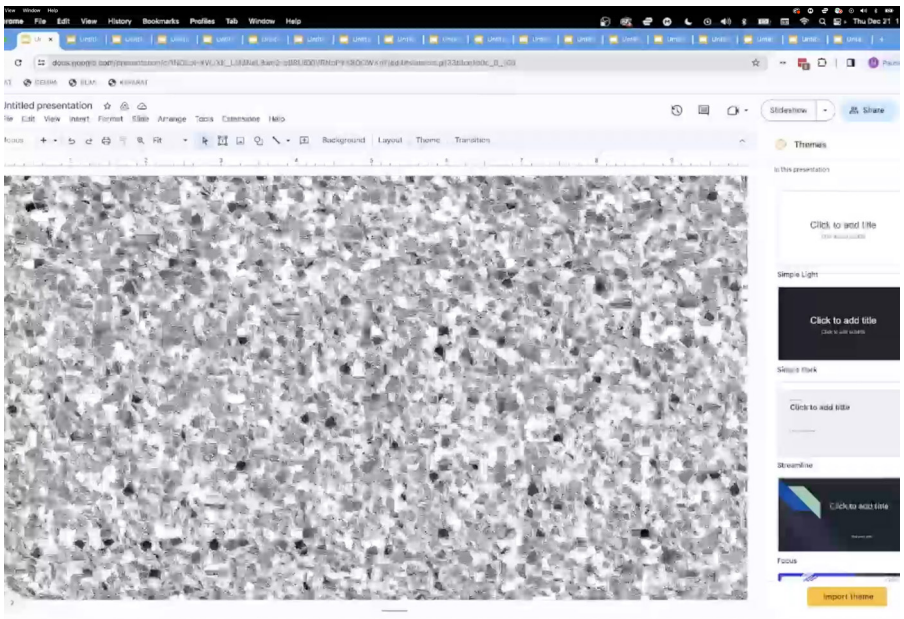

desktop theater, 17 minutes

By now, the third iteration knows you intimately, tracing each movement with an ease that’s almost unsettling.

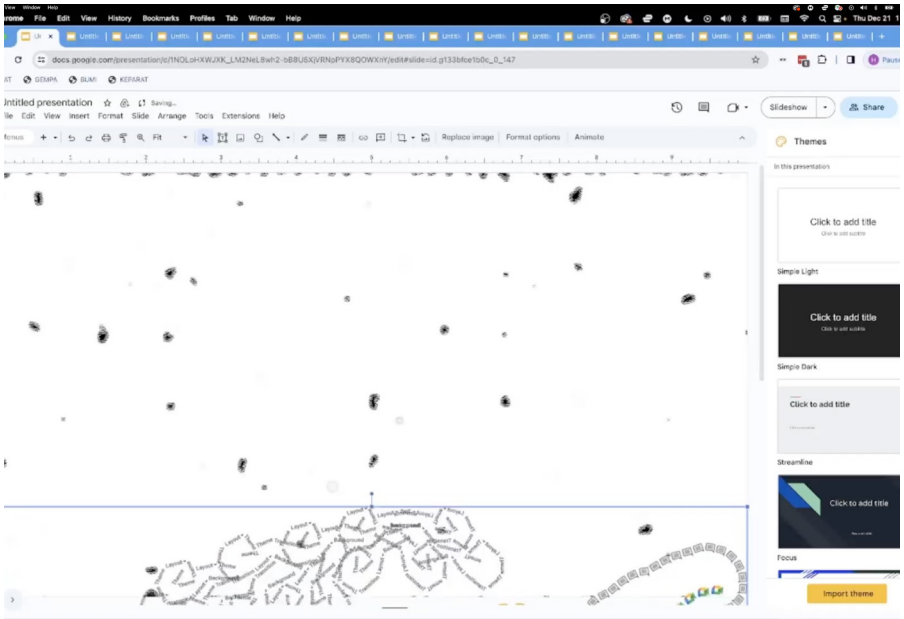

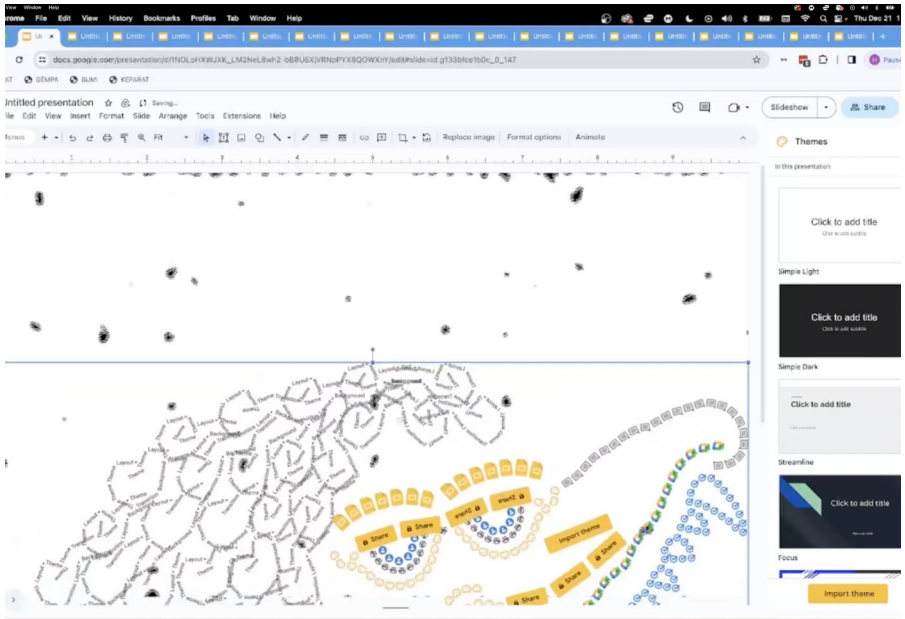

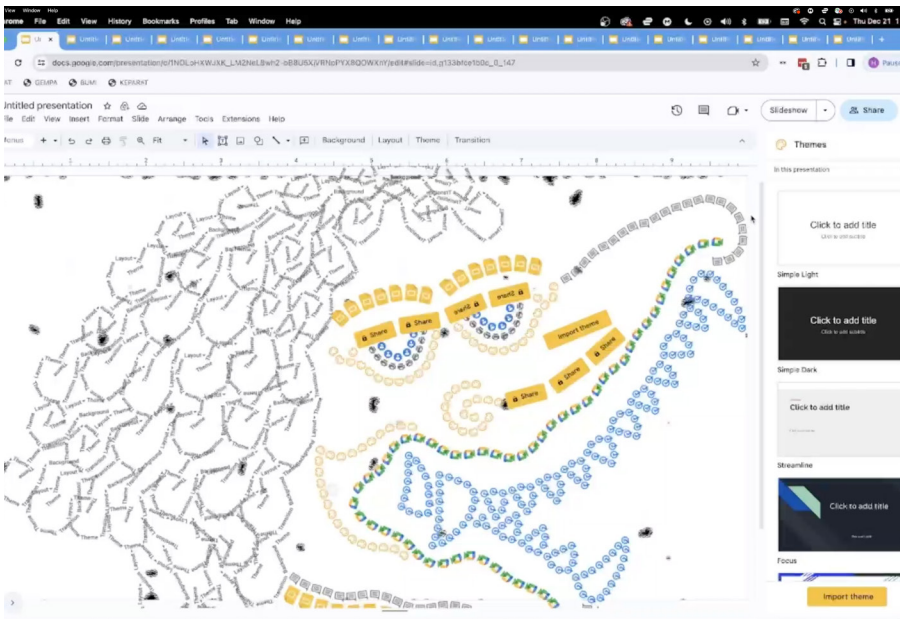

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

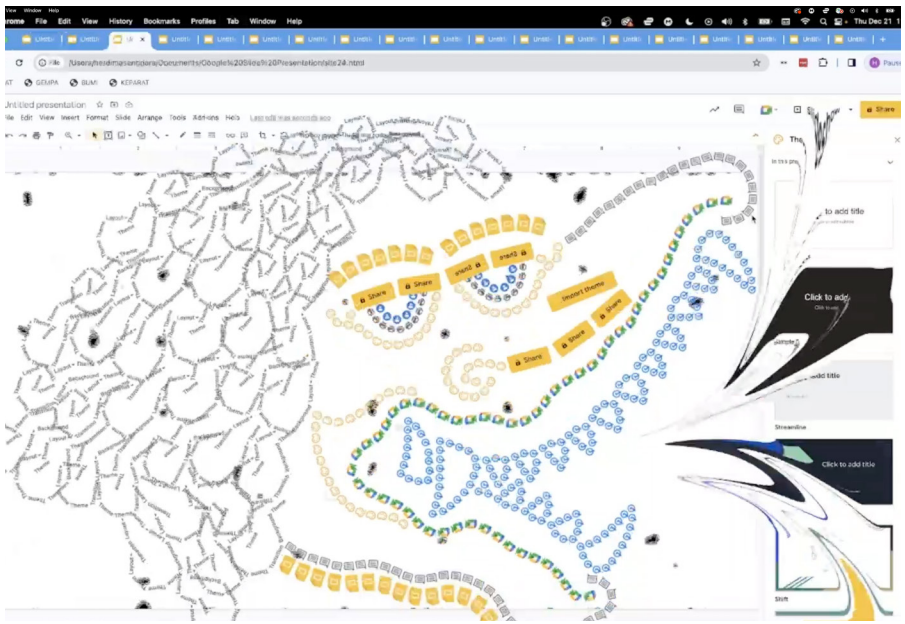

desktop theater, 17 minutes

The lines between you and the ritual have blurred, as though the platform itself has drawn breath, made animate by your rhythm.

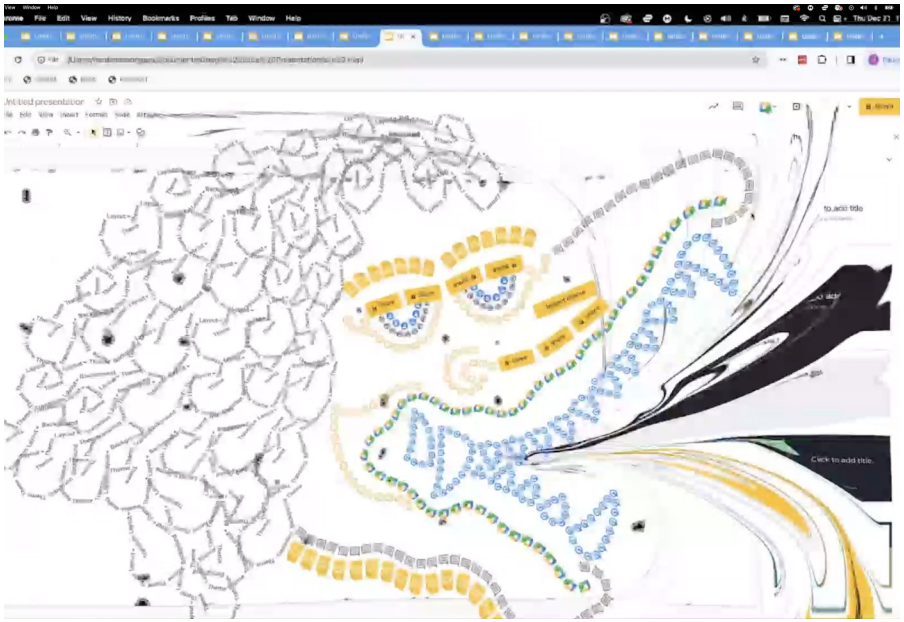

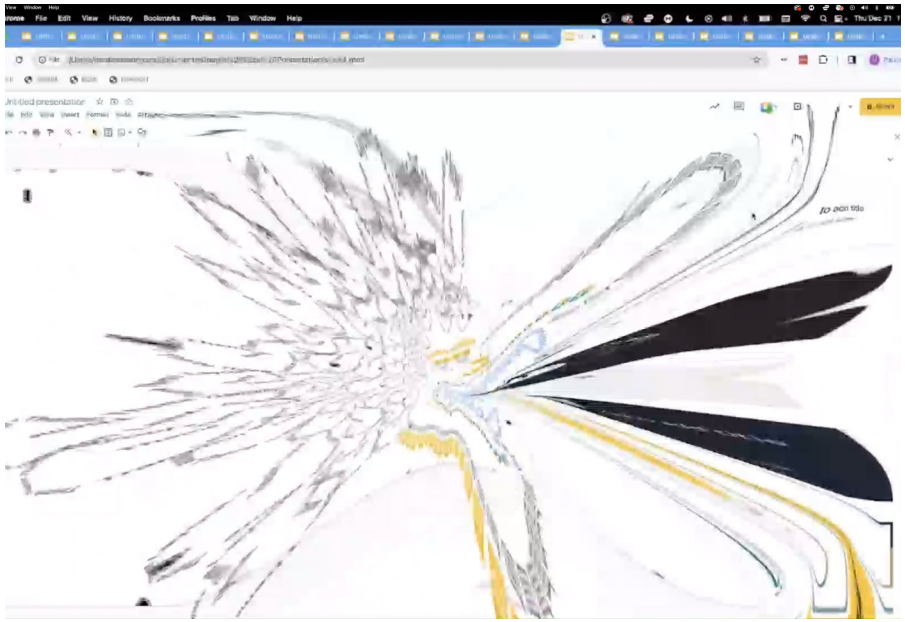

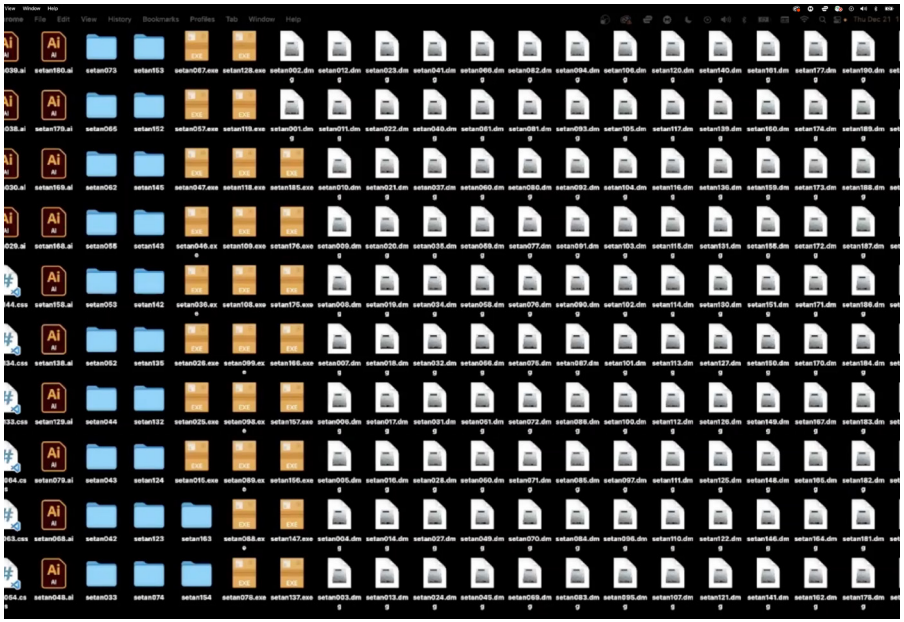

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

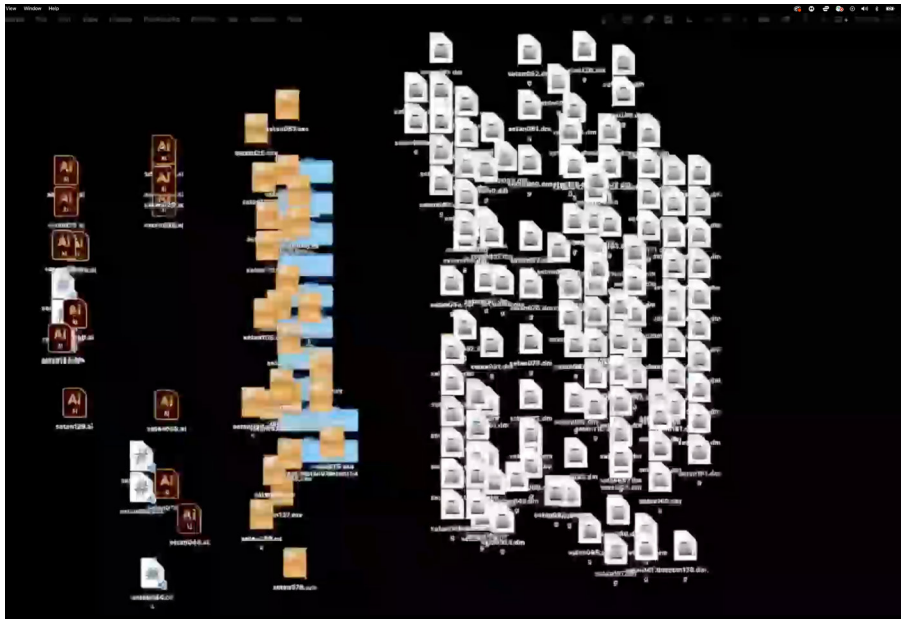

desktop theater, 17 minutes

RASUK has transformed into something greater than a pattern, its presence presses against you, a pulse that threads through every familiar motion.

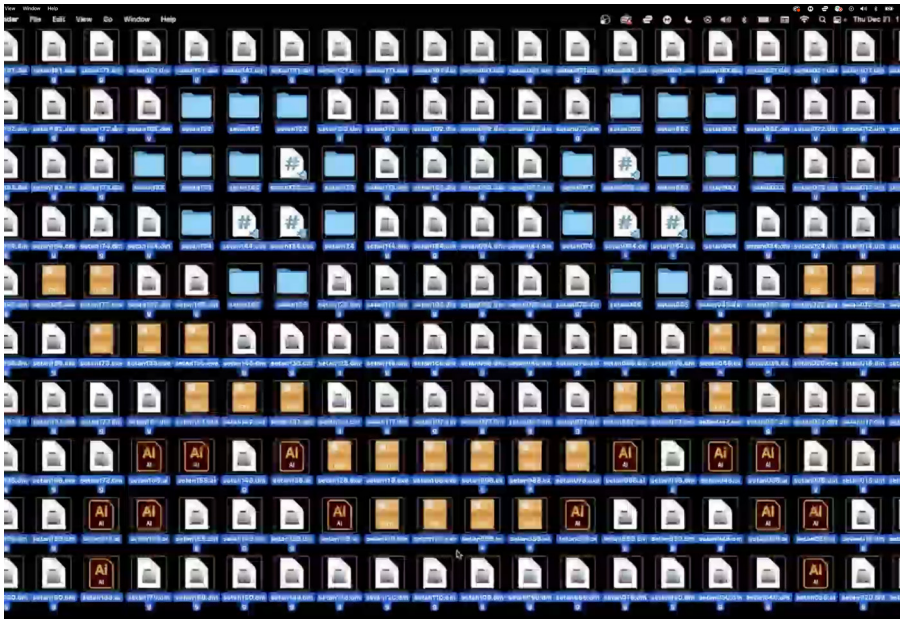

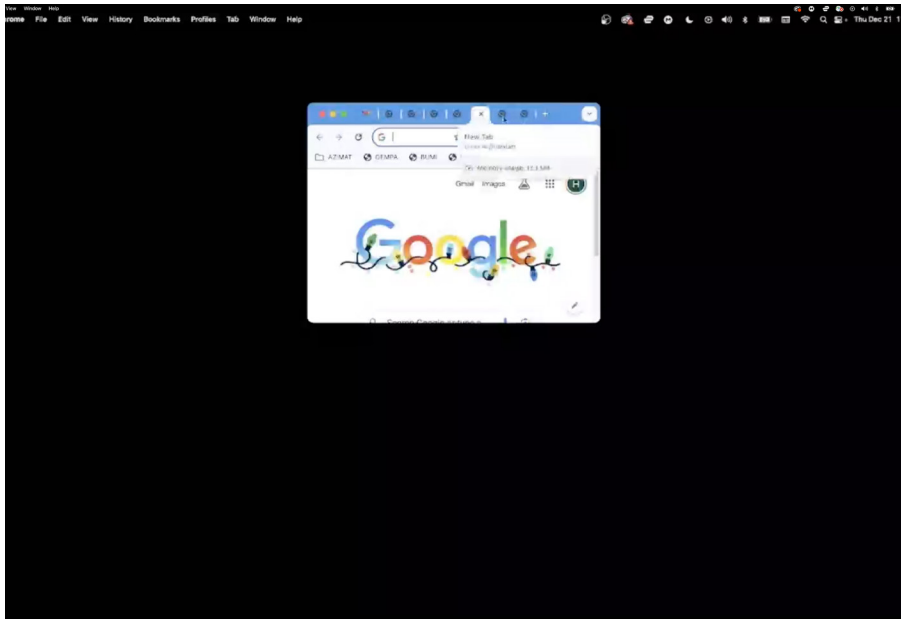

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

desktop theater, 17 minutes

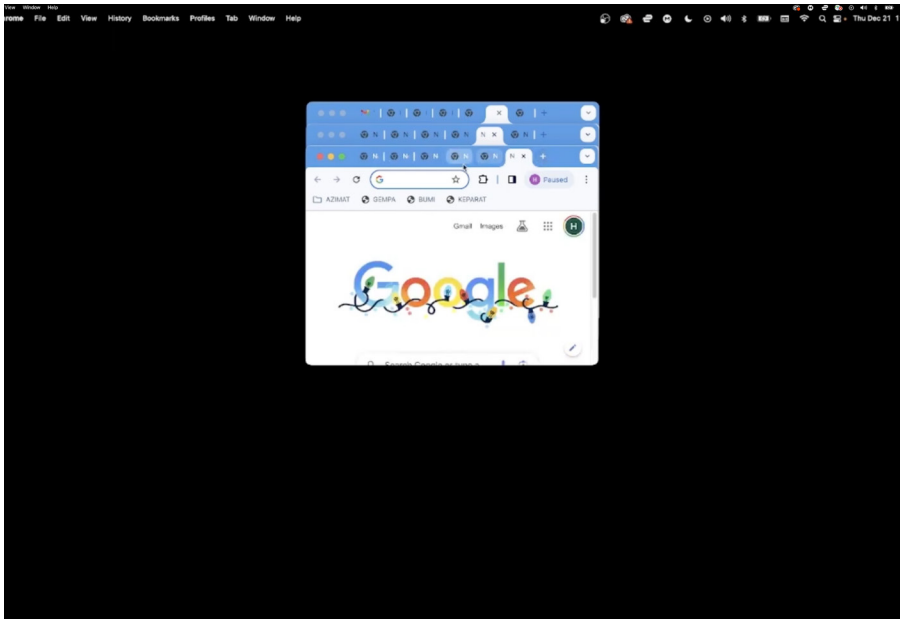

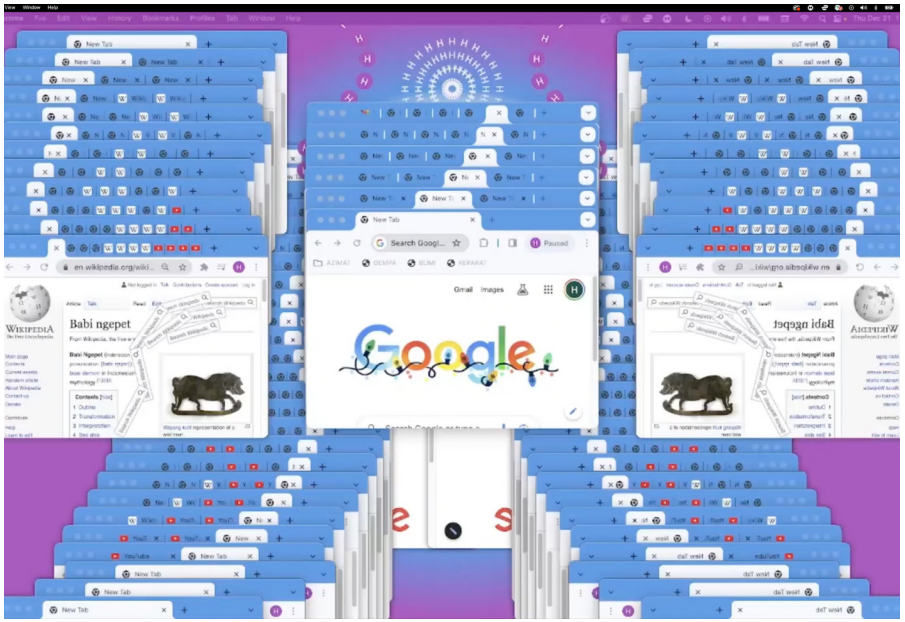

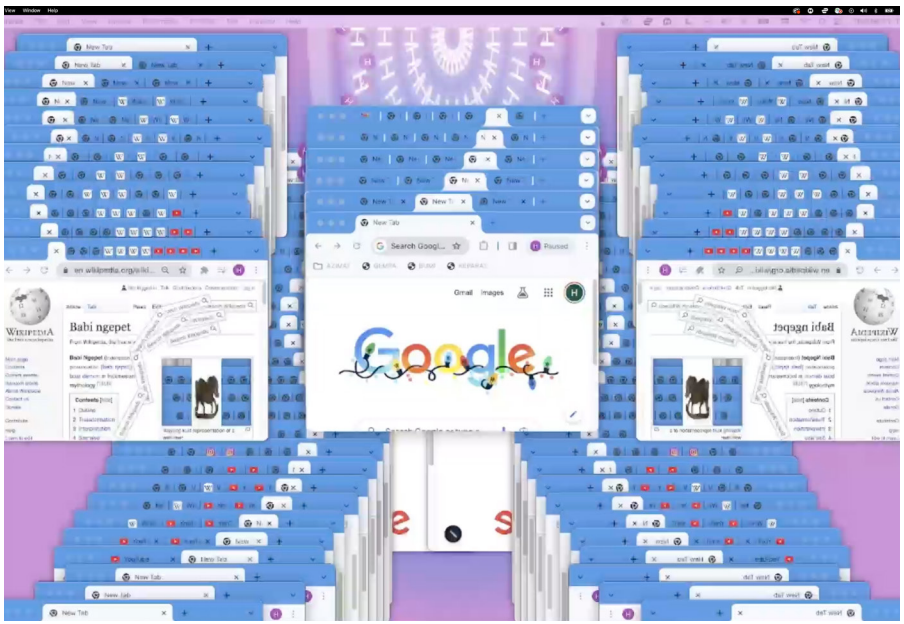

Now, each gesture feels both distinctly yours and entirely not, as if you're simultaneously the dancer and the dance.

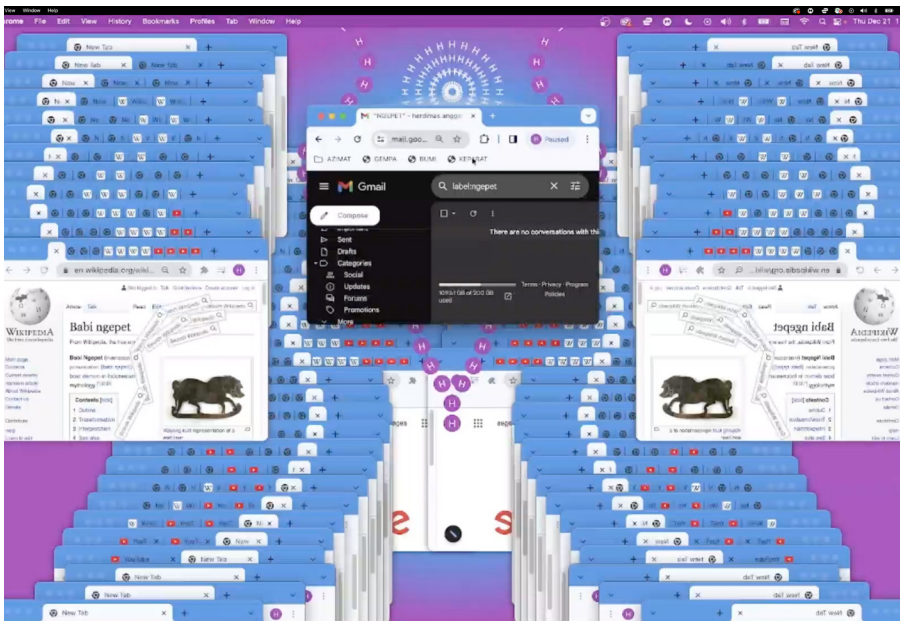

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

desktop theater, 17 minutes

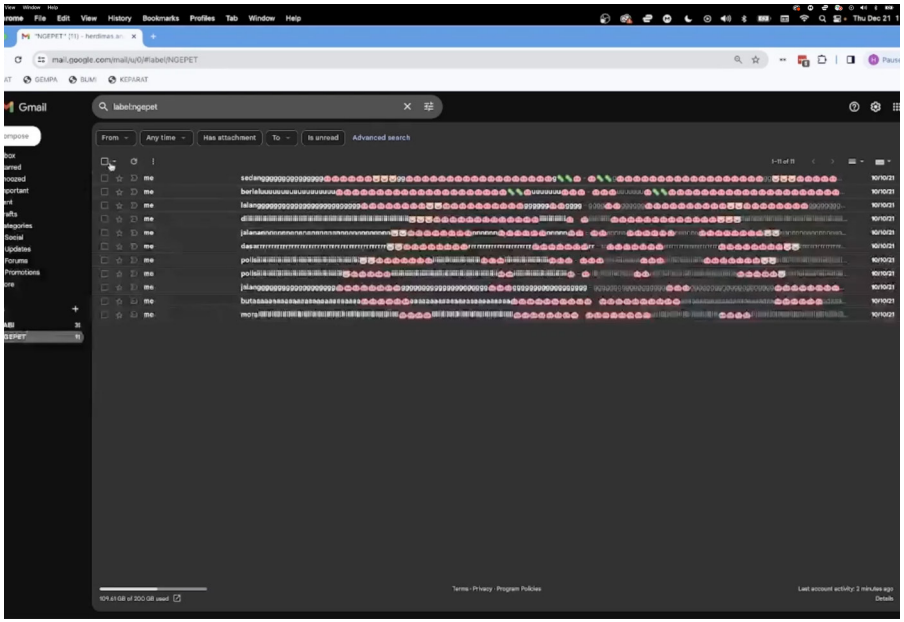

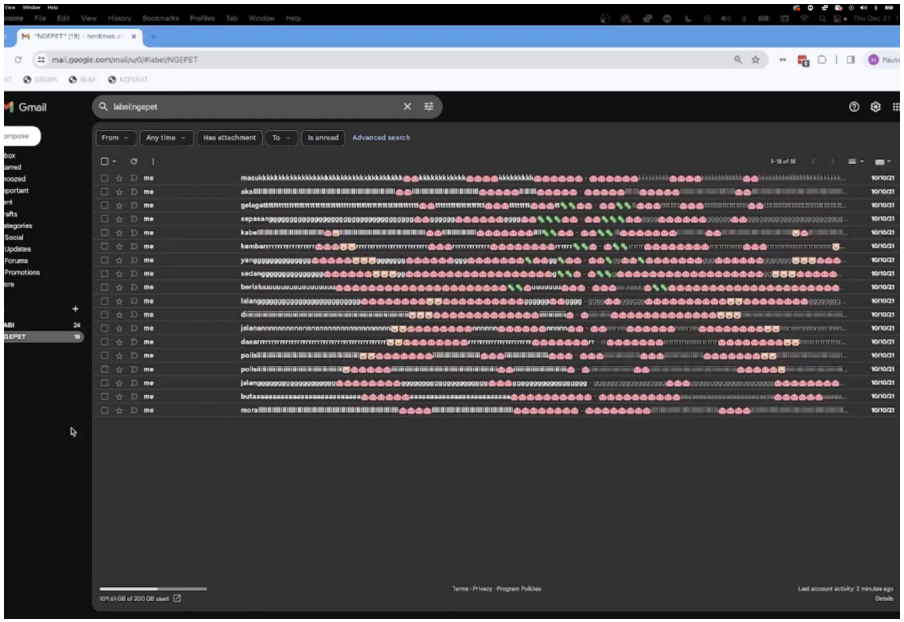

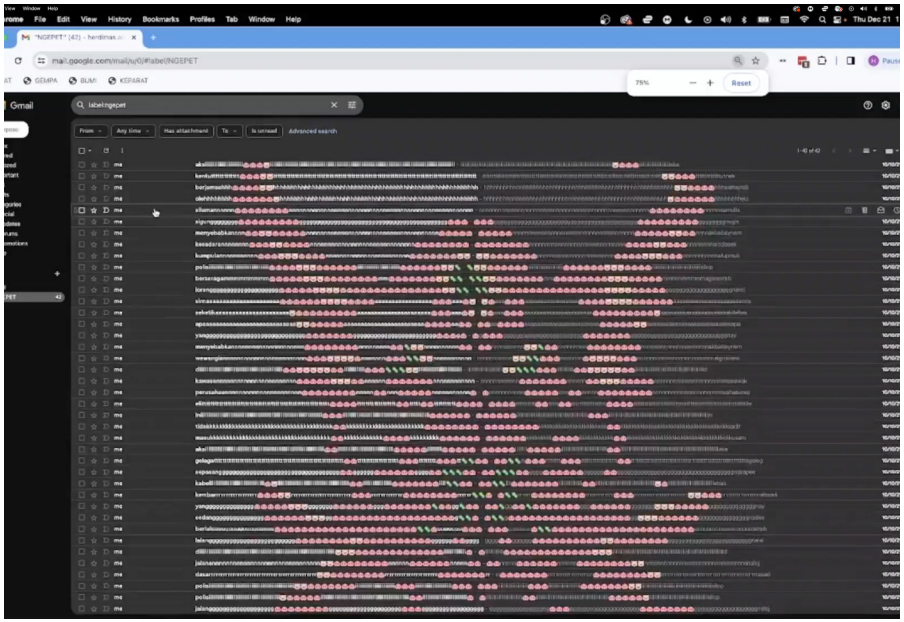

Here, in this strange convergence of ritual and reality, the performance reveals itself in full, an uncanny awareness where losing yourself becomes a kind of freedom.

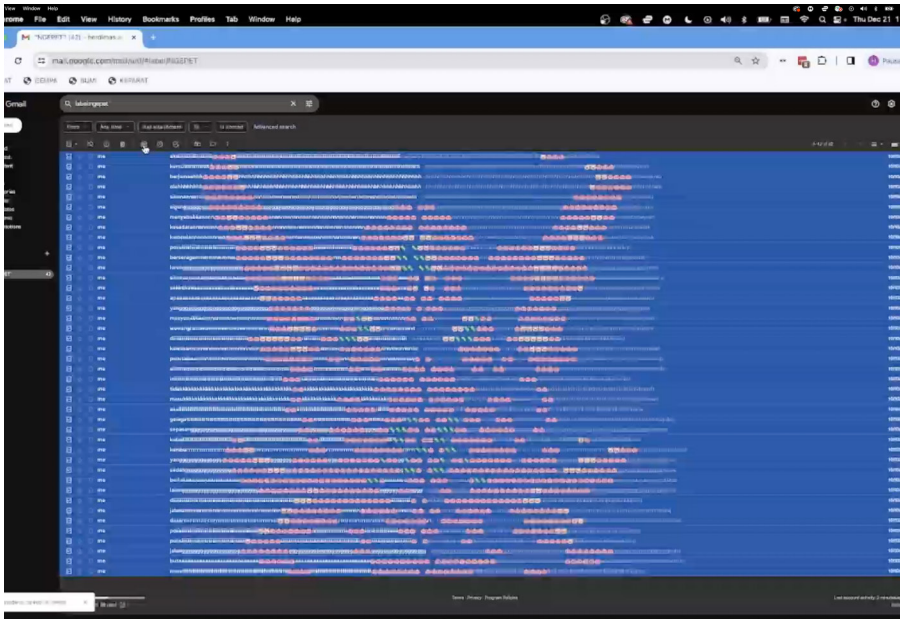

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

desktop theater, 17 minutes

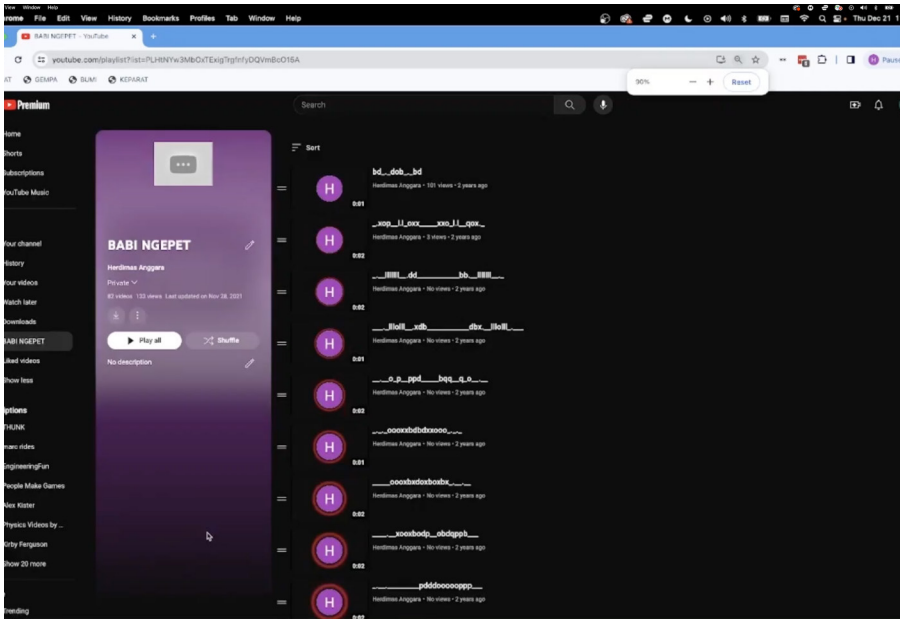

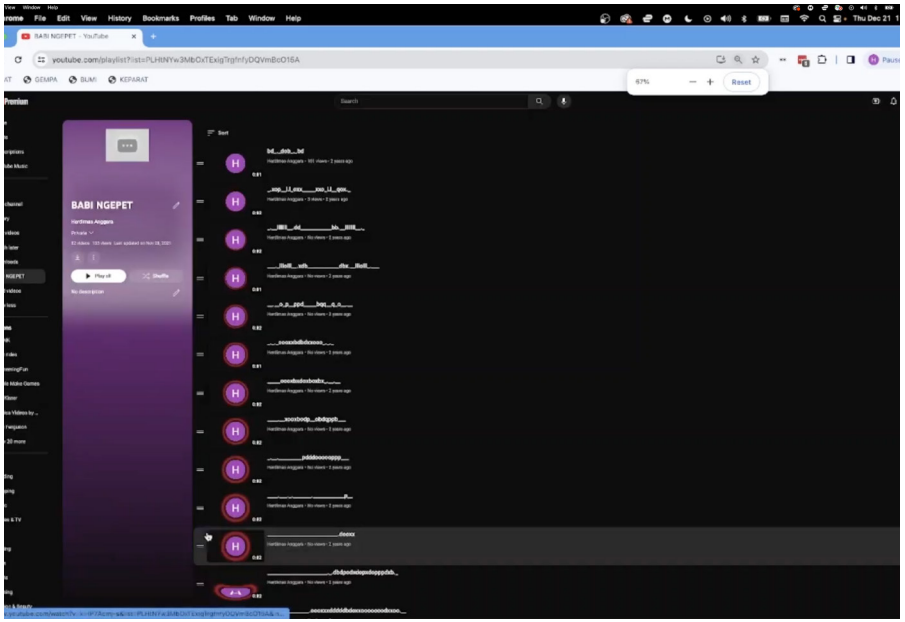

It’s no longer about completing the task; it’s about surrendering to the act, letting the ritual possess you just enough to see how deeply it has woven itself in.

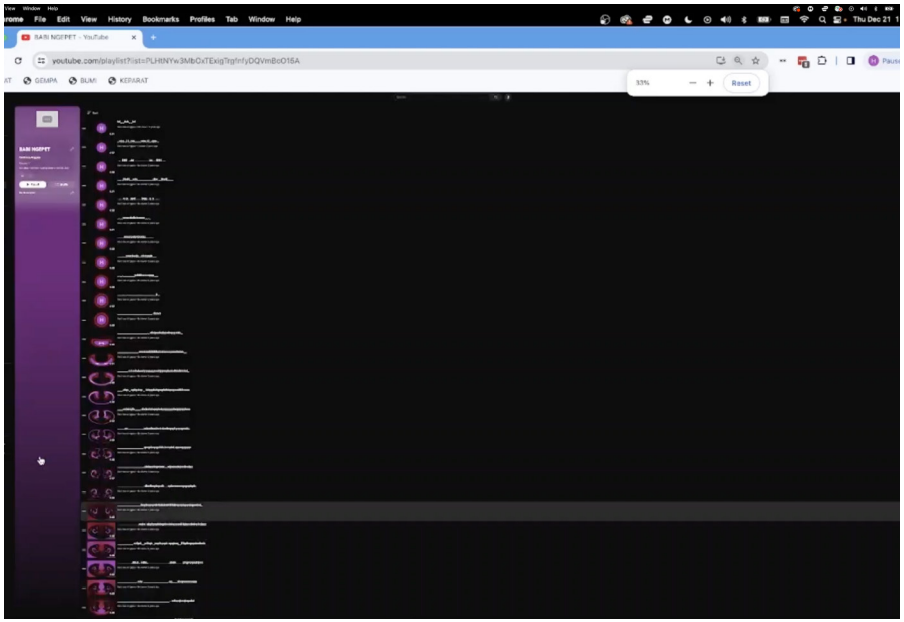

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

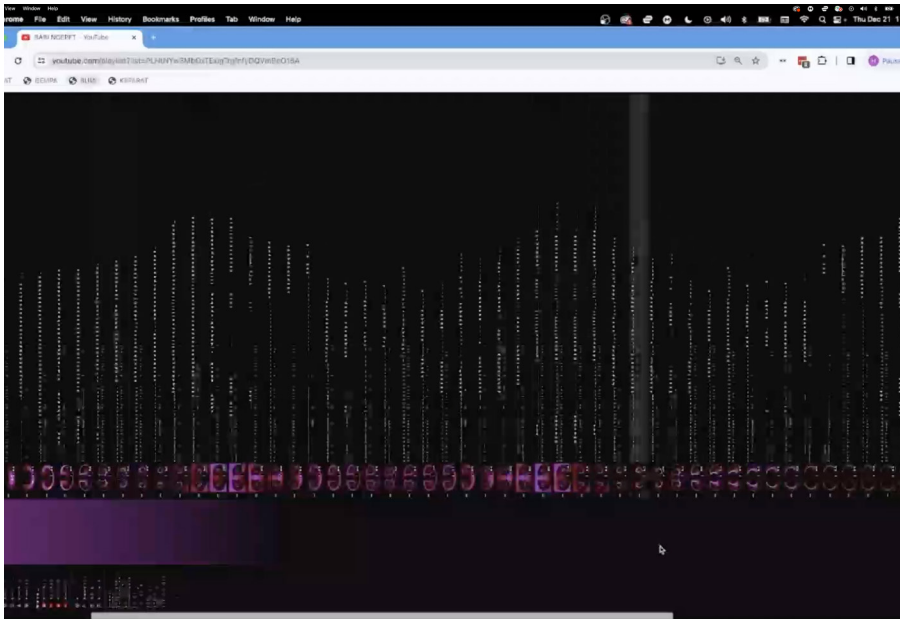

desktop theater, 17 minutes

The ritual is no longer something you're performing, but something that is being performed on you.

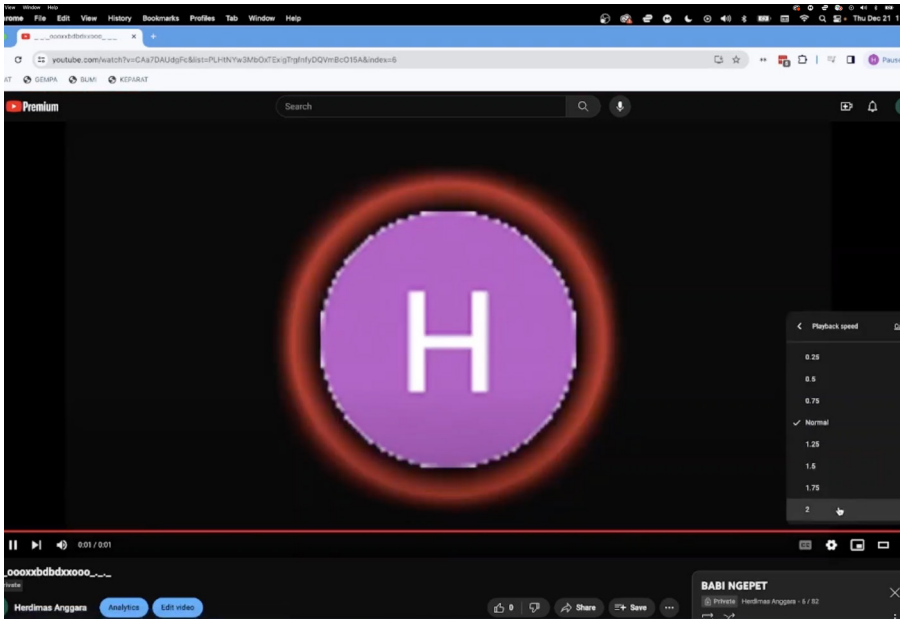

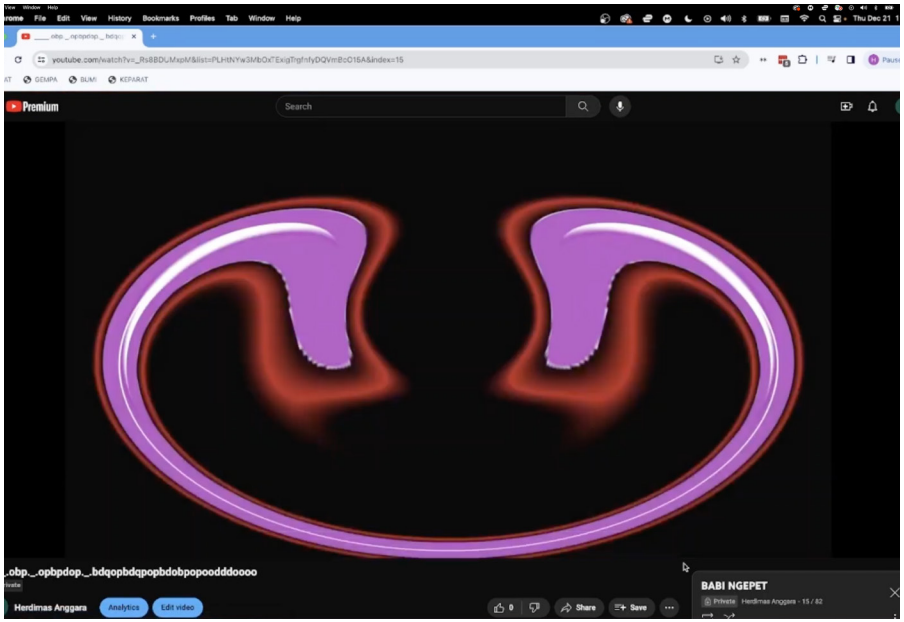

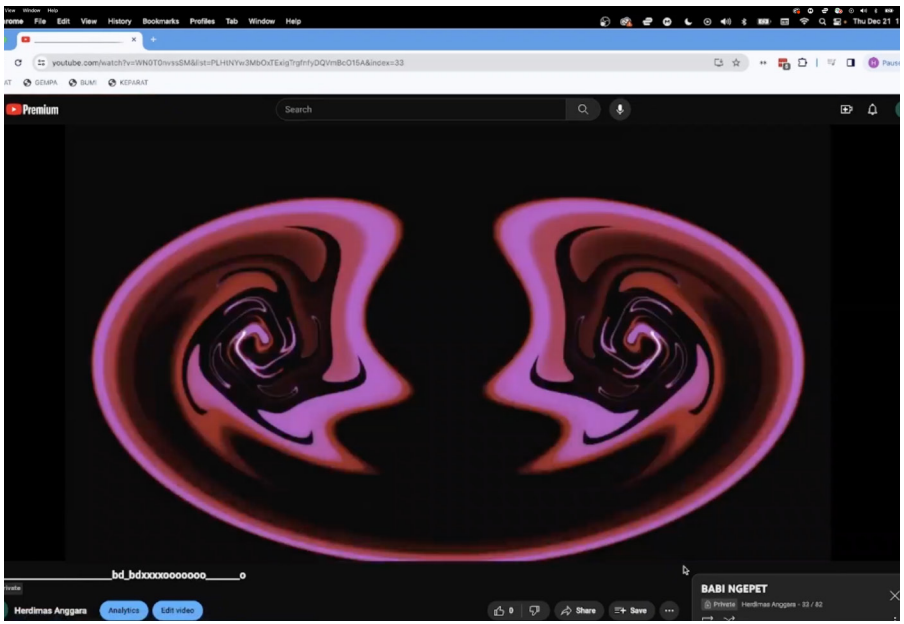

rA@GMAIl.com herdimas.anggara@GMAIL.com herdimas.anggara@gMAIL.Com herdimas.anggara@gmAIL.COm herdimas.anggara@gmaIL.COM Herdimas.anggara@gmaiL.COM HErdimas.anggara@gmail.com herdIMAS.Anggara@gmail.com herdiMAS.ANggara@gmail.com herdimAS.ANGgara@gmail.com herdimaS.ANGGara@gmail.com herdimas.ANGGAra@gmail.com herdimas.aN

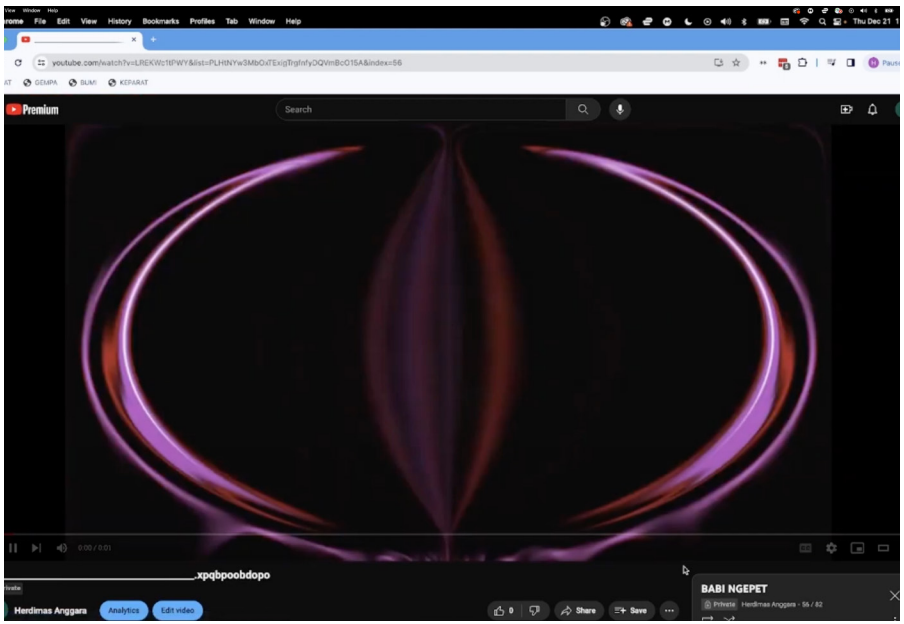

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

desktop theater, 17 minutes

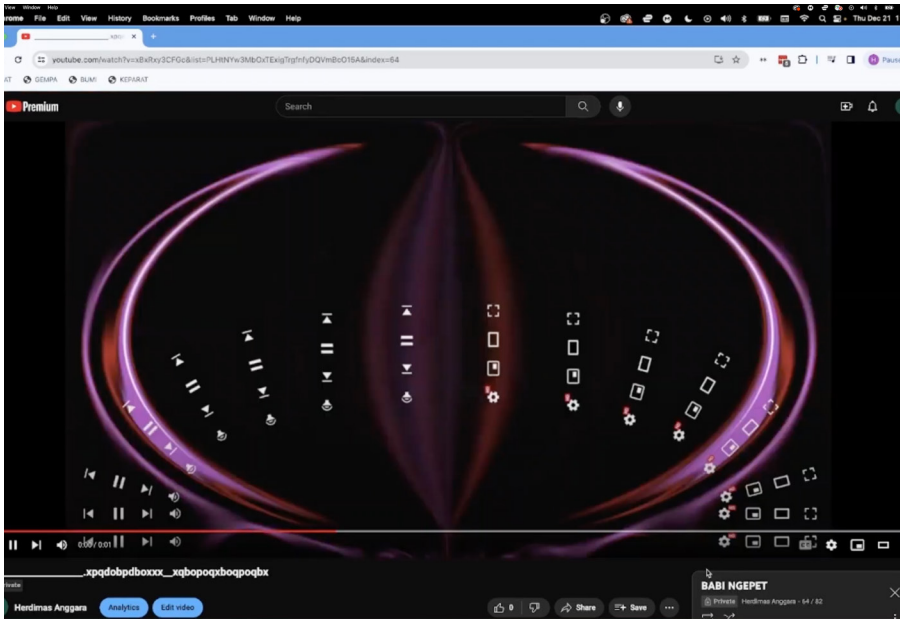

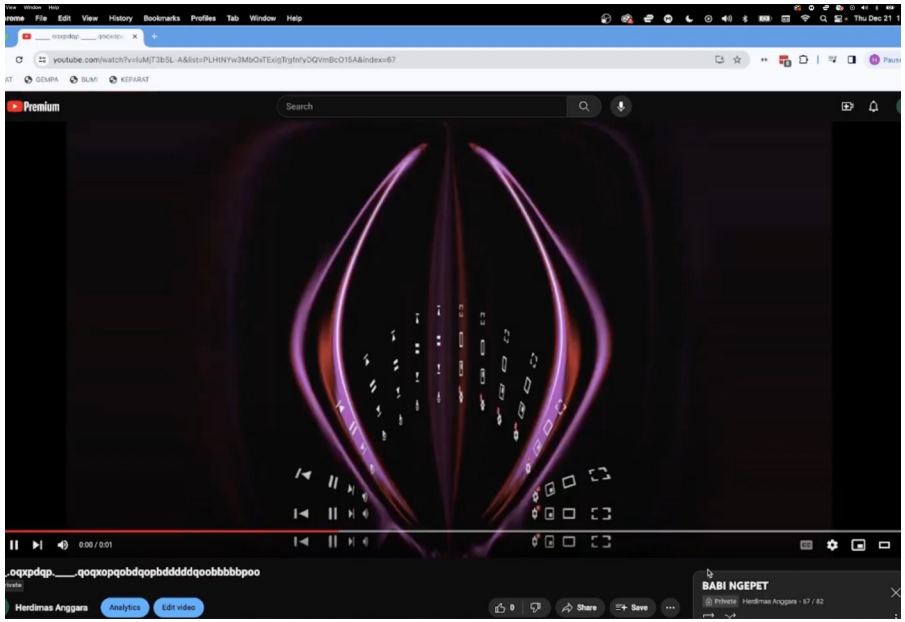

And as you move through the motions, a subtle dread begins to grow, creeping in from the edges, like shadows pooling where light once was.

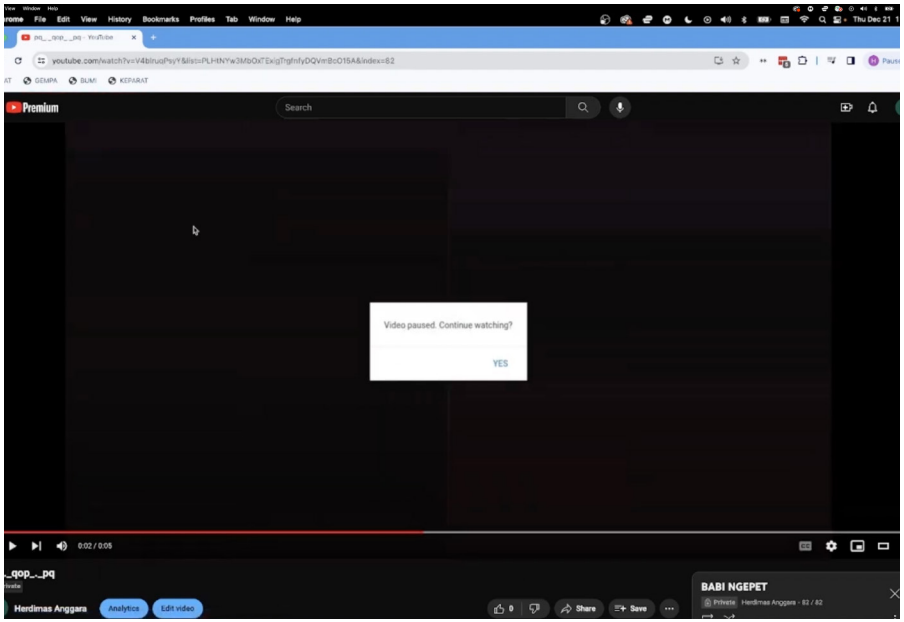

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

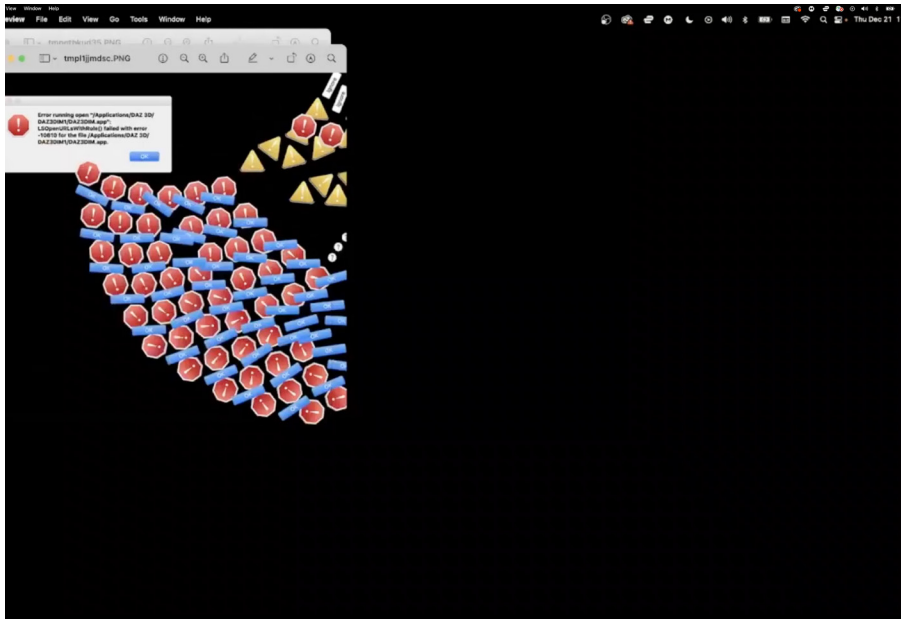

desktop theater, 17 minutes

It's a feeling you can't quite name, a quiet certainty that something unseen is watching, lingering just beyond the screen's thin veil.

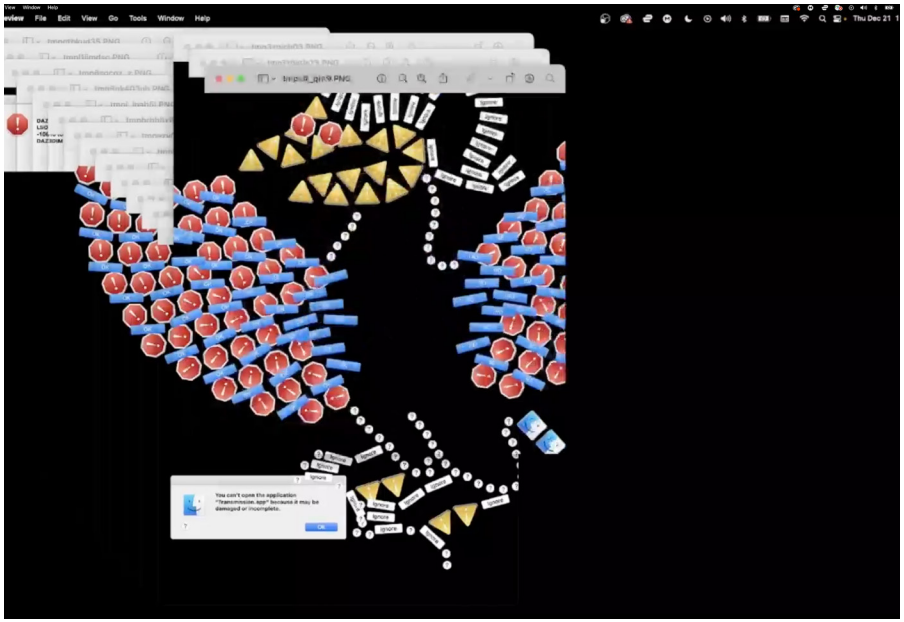

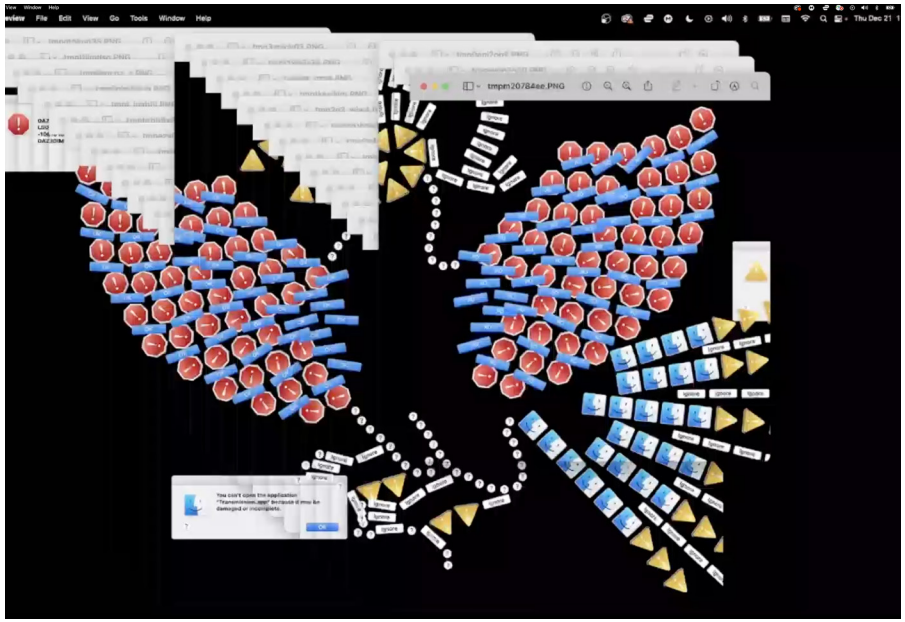

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

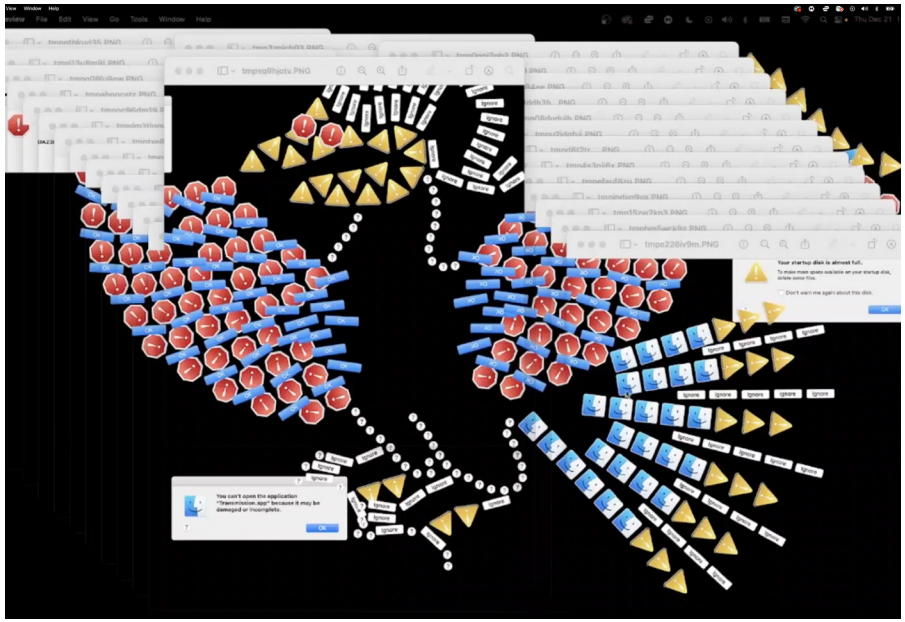

desktop theater, 17 minutes

You sense its presence, steady and unblinking, observing each movement with a patience that feels both ancient and inexhaustible, waiting for you to slip, to yield.

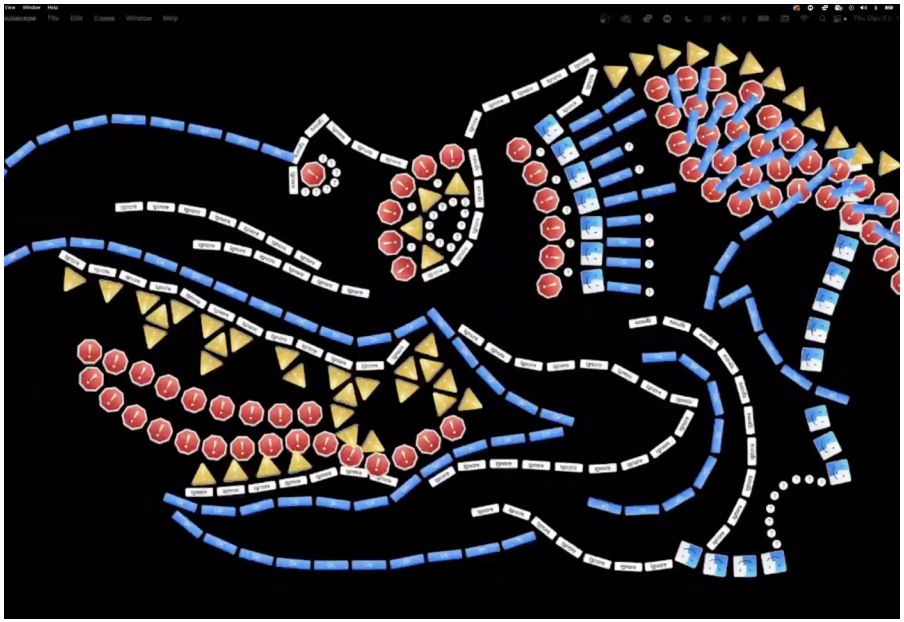

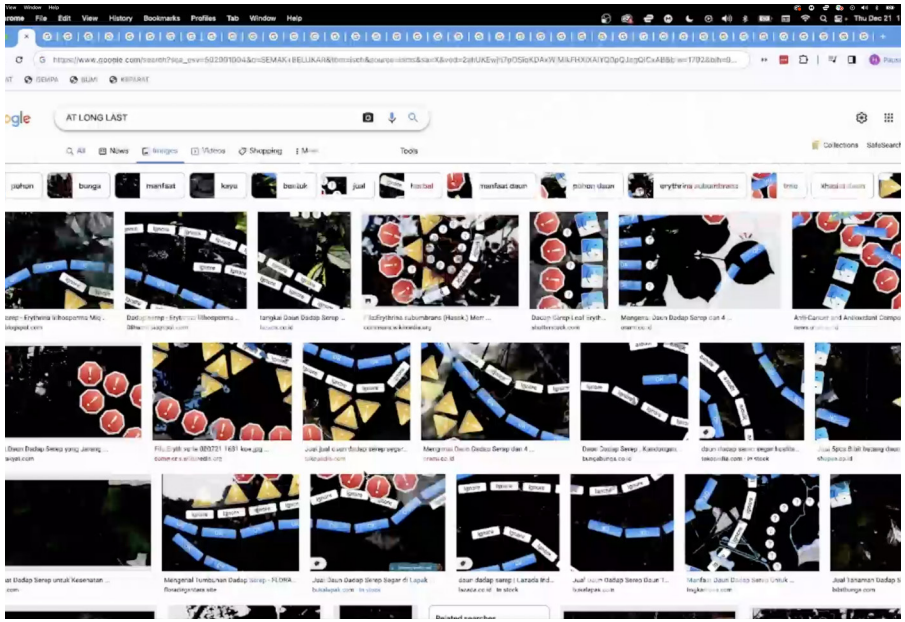

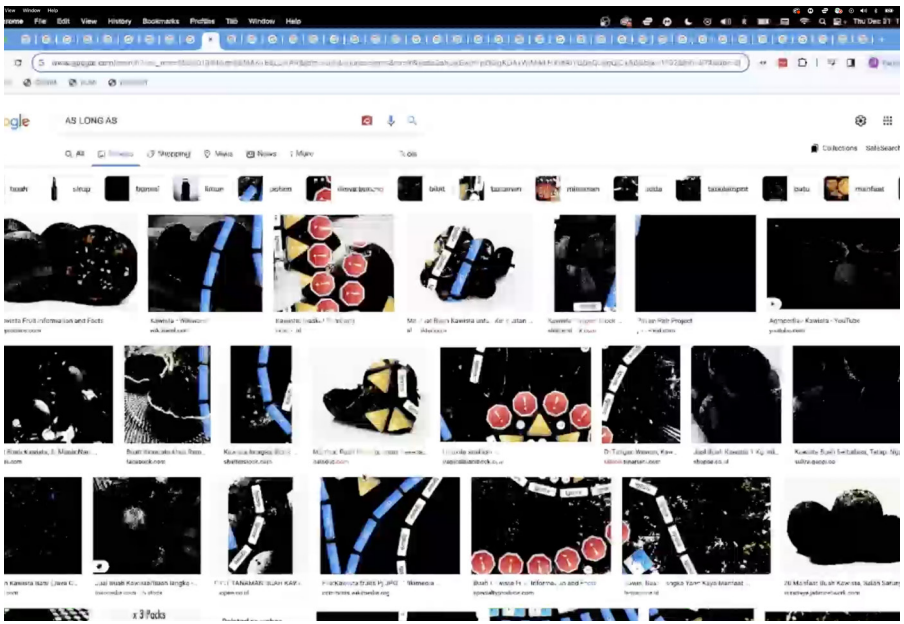

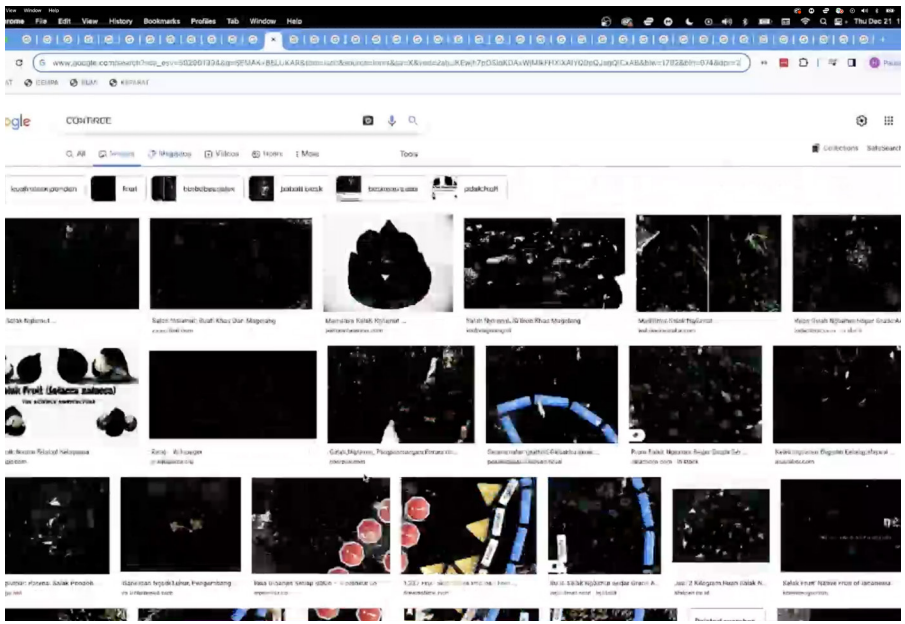

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

desktop theater, 17 minutes

There's a tightening in your chest, a quiet but insistent pressure, as if whatever you've let in is drawing closer.

RASUK (2023), ACT 03

desktop theater, 17 minutes

Biding its time, unfolding petal by petal, ready to bridge the distance as soon as you finally yield.

